Two Injured Men Taken to Hospital

Sportsman Fails to Explain Deaths; Not Intoxicated, Police Say.

Charged with voluntary manslaughter and failing to stop after a station wagon had run down four colored men, killing two and injuring two others, Thomas O. Greenough, 28, wealthy Virginian, was released last night from the county jail in Washington, Va., on $5,000 bond.

Leaving the jail, where he had been held for several hours, he went to Charlottesville with his attorney, Lyttleton Waddell, of Charlottesville.

Greenough, young sportsman who manages his mother's large estate near Orange, Va., was charged by Sheriff H. F. Keyser, of Rappahannock County, with striking four colored men as they fled from his onrushing motorcar.

A graduate of Cambridge University in England and a football player at Amherst College, Greenough is a scion of a family prominent in the wealthy communities of Keswick and Proffit.

The young man was caught after a spectacular chase which ended dramatically at the end of the Key Bridge across the Potomac at 2:30—two hours after the double death near Washington, Va., Sunday morning.

Broadcast Spurs Hunt.

A police radio broadcast from Washington, D. C., put Arlington County officers on the trail of the driver of the vehicle. James Lillard, Arlington County policeman, made the arrest.

"He almost ran me off the road," Lillard said.

The station wagon's headlight, fenders and window curtains were smashed and blood stained, Lillard said.

Greenough was quoted by police as having no explanation of the roadside deaths except that he "knew he had hit something." Police said he was not intoxicated, which led them to place their unusual charge of voluntary manslaughter.

Allows No Interviews.

Waddell declined to permit reporters to interview Greenough and declared his client would make no statement "for publication." Greenough will be required to appear at Washington for a preliminary hearing before Trial Justice George Settle April 16, authorities said.

The young man, smartly dressed in whipcord riding breeches and riding boots, said he was the son of Mrs. Henry Waldo Greenough, whose parties and entertainments were the talk of Charlottesville a quarter century ago.

He manages her estate, where she now lives in seclusion behind barbed-wire fences and padlocked gates, with her peacocks and other pets, after a series of romantic tragedies which read like fiction.

Built $70,000 Home.

His mother, a prominent and wealthy society woman from Providence, R. I., widow of the former mayor of that city, moved to Charlottesville a quarter century ago. After a series of magnificent entertainments she married a young Virginia University law student, Robert D. Crawford, building him a $70,000 home at Proffit, Va., known as Crawford Villa.

The marriage produced twin sons, Thomas Olney and Robert. Later, the father, who was a musician and organist at the university in addition to his law studies, was sued by his wife for divorce. He moved to a Baltimore hotel and died before the divorce was granted.

An old childhood sweetheart from Providence then moved to Charlottesville to be near his bereaved friend. This was Henry Waldo Greenough, of a wealthy and aristocratic Providence family. The widow married Greenough, changing the names of her twin boys from Crawford to Greenough.

Husband Falls Dead.

Nats Buy Al Simmons Of Detroit for $15,000

By a Staff Correspondent.

Lakeland, Fla., April 4.—Al Simmons, for 13 years a heavy-hitting outfielder in the American League, today was purchased from Detroit by the Washington Nats. The purchase price was reported $15,000, although definite figures were not released.

Purchase of Simmons, who batted .327 last year, was the outgrowth of Washington's frantic search for a right-handed hitting outfielder following Fred Sington's disappointing performance in training camp. Simmons will be the highest paid player on the Nats' roster. His salary is $16,000 yearly.

Forerunners of Cherry Blooms

Vanguard of Visitors Arrives To See First Cherry Blossoms

Throng Represents All Parts of U. S. as Festal Week Opens; Blooming Expected to Be Rapid; 10,000 Will View Formal Exercises.

Thousands of visitors reached Washington yesterday to form the vanguard of the Capital's cherry blossom throngs.

The day officially opened the week set aside for the historic blooms, although those who reached the Tidal Basin yesterday saw only a few blossoms. The early arrivers, however, did see enough to reward them for their promptness—and probably to hold them until festivities actually get underway later in the week.

There was an enchanting haze about the trees yesterday. The fast-opening buds were enveloped in yellow fuzz that gave them a powdery cast. The condition of the buds indicates a prompt blooming, C. Marshal Finnan, head of the National Capital Parks, said.

Blooming to Be Rapid

The blossoming will make rapid progress from now on, officials said. And if there should be a sunny day the blooms would be out in all their pinkish glory almost at once, it was thought.

Visitors here yesterday came from nearly every section of the country. Motorists' cars bore license plates from many States. Trains, planes and buses were filled with sightseers. Their numbers were hard to estimate, but if the influx continues there will be fully 100,000 persons here by midweek, traffic experts estimated.

While the festival week is officially started, there will be no formal ceremonies before Thursday. That day's program will begin at 6 a. m. with sunrise ceremonies, in which the Evelyn Davis Dancers will take part and the United States Marine Band will play. Miss Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the Community Center Department, will be in charge. The climax of the program will be kept for night.

Plans to Be Completed.

Between now and that time elaborate preparations are to be completed by C. Melvin Sharpe, head of the festival committee, and members of his staff. Work on the queen's barge is well under way; it is to be an immense dream float, on which Miss Sakika Saito, 10-year-old daughter of the Japanese Ambassador, will be enthroned after she is crowned queen of the festival, and on it she makes her inspection tour of the Tidal Basin Thursday night.

A second barge is to be anchored in the middle of the basin, and there the formal ceremonies are to take place. This will be illuminated by huge floodlights, making it plainly visible from every point around the Tidal Basin.

The queen's barge, it was disclosed yesterday, will be towed around the basin by a great white mechanical swan. The barge will be decorated with other figures of swans and water dragons.

Concerts Arranged.

The Thursday program will have plenty of music. The committee yesterday said there will be concerts throughout the day at points around the basin.

The night events will begin at 7:15 p. m., when the Marine Band begins a concert. Queen Sakika will be escorted from the Japanese Embassy on Massachusetts avenue to the festival grounds, where she will

Leftists Menace CordobaRebels In New Sector

Fascists Face 2 Attacks; Italian Planes Reported Over Barcelona.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, April 4.—The government army struck in a new sector of the far-flung Cordoba Province battlefront today and intensified the menace to the insurgent's main line of communications.

Dispatches from the southern battleground told of a sudden westward extension of the offensive the government has been pushing successfully for a week in the prized mining lands northwest of Cordoba. The new thrust carried government troops to the rear of the insurgents holding the Penarroya mining zone.

Meanwhile, a Catalan government communique at Barcelona today asserted that "airplanes marked with Italian army insignia" had bombarded villages along the Catalan coast, causing many casualties. The communique said two trimotored bombers appeared over the suburbs of Barcelona early this morning and dropped many bombs before Catalan pursuit planes drove them off.

Vital Town Captured.

A government column was reported to have captured the important town of Valsequillo, 10 miles northwest of Penarroya, and to have continued toward La Granjuela, junction point of roads to the south. Thirty men of an insurgent rearguard were cut off and captured in Valsequillo. Much war material was taken.

This operation put Penarroya under attack from two sides, as another government column was forcing its way down the road which runs south from Hinajosa del Duque into the mine country.

If the government columns now driving toward the main Cordoba highway should reach it at Penarroya all possibility of a westward retreat for the insurgents would be cut off.

At the same time the main government column which began the drive from Pozoblanco is attempting to take Villaharta, about 18 miles north of Cordoba, which would close the eastern outlet and bottle up the insurgents between there and Penarroya.

Rebels Fight Back.

Clipper Forced Down in Sea 4 Miles Off Brazil; 31 Safe

By the United Press.

Santos, Brazil, April 4.—A major disaster was narrowly averted tonight when fog and rain forced Pan-American Airways' Trinidad Clipper, with 31 persons aboard, to land in heavy seas 4 miles off Santos. The ship was brought to shore with the 26 passengers and crew of 5 reported safe.

The ship landed in the rough water with terrific impact after circling Santos for 40 minutes trying to make a scheduled landing.

The pilot immediately wirelessed for tugs, but was able to taxi the ship to shore before rescue boats could reach it.

Passengers and crew were shaken severely by the rough landing, but there was no panic and the officers were reported to have handled the situation perfectly.

LinerBremen Races to Aid Helpless Ship

Vessel's Bridge Torn Away, Rudder Damaged, Captain Hurt.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—Four ships, including the liner Bremen, bucked mountainous seas tonight in an attempt to rescue 37 persons aboard the helpless German freighter Borkum, battered for over 36 hours by a fierce Atlantic storm off the Azores.

The Bremen wirelessed the Radio Marine Corporation at Boston tonight that it was speeding toward the Borkum and expected to reach it by 11 p. m.

"The Borkum's bridge torn away. Rudder damaged, captain hurt. Bremen proceeding," the Bremen's message said, and added that several other ships, including the steamships Stubaldo, Bremerhaven and Zealandic were standing by the disabled freighter.

The Exeter, which reported reaching the Borkum more than 13 hours after the disabled ship's radio had become silent, was proceeding to the next port of call.

"Seas too rough for her," the Bremen reported.

The Exeter's message came after it and two other ships zigzagged four hours trying to locate the Borkum, which had given its position as 280 miles east of the Azores.

"S. S. Exeter now abeam of distress vessel Borkum in latitude 39.50 north, lonigtude 34.21 west," the Exeter messaged anxious shore stations and other ships more than 13 hours after the last calls for aid came from the freighter.

The last word received from the leaking vessel came shortly before 4 p. m. yesterday. Her message, picked up by the steamship City of Norfolk, one of the rescue ships, said:

"Cannot use wireless receiver. Heavily damaged. Drifting helplessly in heavy seas. Need doctor as quickly as possible. Please take radio bearings on us."

Earlier messages, the first of which was picked up at 4:47 a. m. yesterday, said the Borkum's steering gear was gone and that she was taking water at her plates. On board were a crew of 34 and three passengers.

The Zealandic, which arrived yesterday afternoon at the approximate location given by the Borkum, radioed this morning that she and the other ships had been unable to locate the freighter.

"All ships have been hove to in vicinity of Borkum's position since 3:55 p. m. (Saturday) and she has been silent since," the Zealandic's message said.

Errol Flynn Shot In Spain; Wound Is Believed Slight

Madrid (Monday), April 5 (U.P.).—Errol Flynn, adventurous Hollywood movie star and husband of the actress, Lili Damita, was wounded slightly in the head by rebel machine-gun fire Saturday night, according to his traveling companion, Dr. Hermann Erben, a San Francisco amateur photographer.

Erben said that the dashing Irishman was wounded near the left eye by a machine-gun bullet as he was touring the University City sector on the northwestern outskirts of Madrid.

"Flynn and I left by automobile late Saturday for the University front to watch the fighting which was going on then," Erben said.

"Upon arriving we abandoned our car and started walking. Soon there came a burst of machine-gun fire and Flynn fell. I carried him to the car and gave him first aid. I do not think the wound will affect his eyesight, although it was a pretty close shave.

"Flynn left for Valencia at 6 o'clock Sunday morning."

Flynn, 27, sailed from New York, February 24, for Spain as a "newspaper reporter." He and Dr. Erben planned to cover the Spanish war for a London syndicate.

Two Women, One Ill, Other Jobless, End Lives by Gas

Two women, one despondent because of ill-health and the other because she was unemployed, took their lives in the Washington area yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Brown, 50, widow of Alvin H. Brown, prominent Arlington County contractor, was found dead in the basement of her home in 2400 block of Madison street north, near Cherrydale. Gas jets in a heater had been opened.

Mrs. Brown, who had been ill for a long time, was pronounced a suicide by Dr. W. C. Welburn, county coroner. Her husband died two years ago. She is survived by two sons, Vinton and Vernon, and a daughter, Maude. The body is at the C. J. Ives chapel, in Clarendon.

Ruth Lantz, 27, an unemployed waitress, was found dead in her second-floor room at 406 Second street northwest. William Smith, another roomer, and his friend, Walter E. Cranford, detected gas coming from the room and broke in to find the body sprawled on the bed.

Federal Reserve Unit May Act to Uphold Securities.

Committee Drafts Plan to Acquire Issues for Its Banks.

By Russell Smith.

After a two-day meeting, the Federal Reserve Board open market committee yesterday announced itself in readiness to purchase United States Government securities on the open market for the account of the Federal Reserve banks.

In its statement after sessions which extended from Saturday morning until after twilight Sunday, the committee asserted its action was for two principal purposes, "with a view to exerting its influence toward orderly conditions in the money market and (2) to facilitating the orderly adjustment of member banks to the increased reserve requirements effective May 1, 1937."

The former of these two purposes was construed generally as meaning the Federal Reserve Board has determined, if it deems it to be in the public interest, to support Government issues, depressed in recent weeks.

Supports Eccles Policies.

Continuation of the easy money policies of Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, in line with his recent statement, was indicated in the committee's statement of its second aim. Facilitation of "orderly adjustment" to the 16 2/3 per cent increase in reserve requirements means, it was said, banks will be enabled to avoid sale of Government securities without prejudice to their deposits.

Text of the committee's statement was as follows:

"With a view to exerting its influence toward orderly conditions in the money market and (2) to facilitating the orderly adjustment of member banks to the increased reserve requirements effective May 1, 1937, the open market committee of the Federal Reserve System prepared to make open market purchases of United States Government securities for the account of the Federal Reserve banks in such amounts and at such times as may be desirable. This purpose is in conformity with the policy announced by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in its statement on January 30, 1937, which declared with reference to the increase in reserve requirements, that by this action the system would be placed in a position where such reduction or expansion of member bank reserves as may be deemed in the public interest may be effected through open market operations."

Holdings Now $2,430,000,000.

Present holdings of Governments by the system amount to $2,430,000,000. The system's portfolio may or may not be changed in an important way, dependent upon developments. Nor does the policy announcement eliminate possible sales of Government issues, although they must be considered unlikely in the immediate future.

This authority likewise said the present unsteady market situation is unquestionably holding up new financing. From this, it is evidently expected that the announcement will tend to restore confidence and stability in the market.

Country banks have been carrying balances for several years which are regarded in some quarters as heavy. They are reluctant to reduce these balances, however, since they have the authority of tradition now back of them.

When this tendency is taken in conjunction with the disturbance which many officials have felt was caused by the increase in reserve requirements, the open market committee's view that purchases for accounts is desirable becomes clearer.

Yesterday's statement in no sense represents an effort to peg the market, it was made clear, recalling Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's similar statement of Thursday. In the face of his statement committee statement, the reserve board had "plenty of money to keep the market orderly," a severe dip in Government securities followed his statement.

The readiness of the committee to go into the open market at this time was attributed in some quarters to this reaction of the market to Morgenthau's words. From similarity of his words to the statement of the committee yesterday, it was inferred the policy has been worked

Former Husband Of Mary Pickford PsychopathicCase

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP).—Owen Moore, veteran stage and movie actor and former husband of Mary Pickford, was confined in the psychopathic ward of Los Angeles General Hospital today.

Moore was placed in the hospital on a complaint of his wife, the former actress, Katherine Perry, who stated he became intoxicated the night of April 1 and threatened her life. She said in the complaint that Moore on three previous occasions had been confined in private institutions.

Attendants at the hospital said Moore's general condition was good.

Moore, now 51, was one of the first stage actors to forsake the footlights for the movies. His last screen performance was in Mae West's "She Done Him Wrong." He was divorced from Miss Pickford in 1920.

D. C. Attorney Shot to Death In Los Angeles; Wife Is Held

Case Suicide, Police Hint; Neighbors Tell of Drinking Bout.

By the United Press.

Los Angeles, April 4.—Marian Souther was questioned by police tonight after her husband, Gordon Souther, 29-year-old Washington, D. C., attorney, was found dead in their exclusive Wilshire district apartment.

Souther's body lay fully clothed on a bed, a bullet hole in his right temple. On an adjacent twin bed lay a .22-caliber rifle containing one exploded and four live cartridges.

Although Mrs. Souther was booked on "suspicion of murder," police said evidence appeared to indicate suicide.

Mrs. Souther told detectives her husband had been a practicing attorney in Washington, but had come to Los Angeles seven months ago. He had taken the California Bar examination but had failed to pass, she said.

Neighbors said both Southers had been drinking heavily.

Mrs. Jean Tregoff and her son, James, who lived on the floor above, said the attorney came to their door at 8:45 p. m. Saturday and invited them to dinner.

He appeared to be intoxicated, and they refused, Mrs. Tregoff said.

Some time later Mrs. Souther came to the door and begged them to "please come down because my husband is badly hurt."

PoliceStudying Five-YearDiary Of Artist Model

'Ronnie' Gedeon's Written Record Expected to Aid in Solving Murders.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—A diary in which Veronica Gedeon recorded her thoughts and experiences during the past five years was made public today by police investigating the slaying of the pretty artists' model, her mother and Frank Byrnes, a roomer in the Gedeon apartment, on Easter morning.

From the first contribution, penned in the fine script of a 15-year-old girl, police said the diary was a frank story of the young model's loves, trials and joys.

There was an outpouring of adoration for "Bobby"—presumably Robert Fowler, the young man she later married and with whom she remained friendly even after their youthful marriage was annulled; a wistful prayer for strength; a confession of doubt of her powers of resistance, and an acknowledgement that she knew other men.

"Crazy About Bobby."

Her first entry, dated January 1, 1932, opened on a note of love. "Dear Diary," it began, "I am crazy about a certain boy named Bobby. Last night he was drunk. He was only three hours late. Do I have to stand for that?"

Next night she wrote:

"Saw Bobby, made a good impression on his family. I'm glad I did. Still crazy about him. Wish I wasn't."

The diary was found by police going over the Gedeon belongings together with a memorandum book that contained more than 150 names. The memo book has not proved valuable to the police so far, for none of the persons listed could throw much light on the slain model's life. Many of the names were studios where she posed.

Bound in yellow imitation leather, the diary was inscribed on the fly leaf: "My five year's diary." Some excerpts follow:

"January 3, 1932: Bobby is most loveable creature. Am I worried. I wonder whether mamma will come?

"January 4, 1932: Mother did come. She is the best mother in the world. Digar called. Went out

Doctors Dream of Time When All Will Die at Limit of Longevity.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—Old-age looms as the fastest growing cause of death in the United States today in a survey of the ten deadliest diseases and what the medical profession is doing to control them.

The time when ripe old age will be the only cause of death has been medicine's dream. Medical statistics show that the country is already at the door of some such millenium.

Of the first ten causes of death, six are those in which age is a predisposing factor. All the cases that kill more than 100,000 a year are in the aged class. The foremost, heart disease, with over 300,000 deaths yearly, more than double any other, with a rate rising three times faster than its nearest competitor, cancer, is one of the principal diseases of age.

Latest signs of the millennium door are statements by Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the United States, three days ago, that ten years can be added to the average life span by taking advantage of present medical knowledge—and by Prof. Henry C. Sherman, of Columbia University, that diet now available can add seven years to the life span.

Question of Terms.

"What do you mean by deadliest," asked the spokesman for the New York Academy of Medicine, "those that kill the most or those that are the most quickly fatal?"

Of the ten most deadly in the fatal sense, he explained, only three, the two pneumonias and premature birth, are among today's first ten causes of American deaths.

The other seven are almost forgotten diseases in the United States, notwithstanding that five of them have been among the world's greatest killers. The five are Asiatic cholera, tyhpus, bubonic plague, yellow fever and smallpox. The other two are streptococcus, septicemia and botulinus poisoning.

Heart deaths rose from 286,000 in 1933 to 303,000 in 1934. These are the first years in which deaths of

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., April 4.—Robert E. Taylor, defense attorney for Dr. R. G. Miller, said tonight the Charlottesville dentist would plead guilty in Albemarle Circuit Court tomorrow to a second degree murder charge in the chloroform death of Cleo Sprouse.

Miller was arrested the day after the body of the high school girl was found near the University of Virginia campus March 2. Sheriff J. Mason Smith said shortly after the arrest Miller had signed a statement saying the girl died of chloroform he administered preparatory to attempting an illegal operation in an automobile on a lonely road near here.

Taylor said defense counsel and Commonwealth's Attorney W. O. Fife agreed "some time ago" on a compromise as "the publicity the trial was bound to attract would be harmful to all concerned."

"The second degree murder plea was agreed upon without a great deal of argument," Taylor said.

The indictment returned against Miller by an Albemarle County grand jury charged murder, which under Virginia law is presumed to be second degree unless proved first degree by the Commonwealth, or a lesser degree by the defense.

Miller, whose trial had been scheduled for April 12, will appear before Judge Lemuel F. Smith at the opening of the April term of court tomorrow. The minimum penalty for second degree murder is 5 years and the maximum 20 years.

A conference of defense attorneys with Fife was held here yesterday, but Taylor said "we had been in accord on this move for some time and the meeting yesterday was held merely as a further discussion of procedure."

Miller has been held in Henrico County (Richmond) jail since shortly after his arrest.

Kansas City Units Hail Ford Accord

Magnate Goes to Detroit; 'Prove You're Fair,' Chrysler Urged.

By the Associated Press.

The powerful Committee for Industrial Organization, acting on orders from John L. Lewis, yesterday launched a mammoth drive to bring 1,500,000 workers in the Southern textile and oil industries into the fold of the C. I. O.

"We are not looking for any fight," said Harvey C. Fremming, C. I. O. chieftain and right-hand man of Lewis, on his arrival at Houston, Tex., to direct the oil field campaign. "We intend instead to drive home the philosophy of collective bargaining. That doesn't mean sit-down strikes, either."

The bulky president of the International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers was assigned to start the drive to bring 1,000,000 oil workers under the Lewis banner at an executive council meeting today.

Council Meets Fremming

Greeting Fremming in Houston were members of the international executive council, who will meet with him to go over detailed plans for the drive in a closed meeting this morning. Fremming said the entire "blue print" of what he termed "one of America's major labor moves" would be made public after the meeting.

Answering a statement by Gov. James V. Allred that sit-down strikes would not be tolerated in Texas, Fremming said: "The first thing I want to do is tell the Governor that John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. don't work on the principle of sit-down strikes. Lewis merely inherited that form of strike. If the Govrenor presumed we were coming to Texas to stage a sit-down strike, he was mistaken. We have no such thing in view. All we want is for the workmen in the oil industry to make the oil union affiliate of the C. I. O. its bargaining agency. That's what we intend to do, and on a national scale."

Fremming said the unionization drive would be managed from seven district headquarters offices and the C. I. O. executive office in Washington.

Agents Invade South.

Meanwhile, 45 agents of the Textile Workers organizing committee—unit of the C. I. O.—scattered into eight Southern States with instructions to bring the half-million workers in the Southern textile industry into line.

As in the automobile and steel drives, the Lewis agents were striking at an industry straining to meet demands taxing its capacity. Mills in the South are working 24-hour shifts to meet a flood of orders. Cotton prices are booming to seven-year highs and mill demand for cotton is acute.

Final plans for the drive in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana and the Carolinas were drawn yesterday by A. Steve Nance, Southeastern chairman of the T. W. O. C. and president of the Georgia Federation of Labor.

Nance read his organizers a message from Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, one of the organizers of the C. I. O. and national head of the T. W. O. C.

Wage Raises Sought.

Hillman said the object of the drive is to "achieve union organization and recognition for the textile workers which will bring higher wages and better working conditions."

"The organizing campaign of the T. W. O. C. must be carried on in a peaceful and lawful manner," Hillman said.

At the same time, C. I. O. affiliates at Kansas City celebrated the settlement of the first Ford Motor Co. sit-down strike, marking progress of the Lewis drive in the auto industry.

While union officials hailed the agreement as assurance "there will be no discrimination against union members" by Ford, the billionaire manufacturer himself was reported to have hurried to Detroit from his Georgia farm to discuss with associates the labor situation in his factories.

Hall Hails Ford Pact.

In Kansas City, Ed Hall, vice president of the United Automobile Workers of America, told cheering C. I. O. unionists that settlement of the Ford plant sit-down is "the first

Court Plan Foes Seeking Accord On Amendment

Wagner Act Ruling May Be Made Today; Awaited in Sit-Down Controversy.

Renewed efforts of President Roosevelt's opponents on the Supreme Court issue to concentrate behind a single constitutional amendment featured week-end maneuvering on judiciary reorganization yesterday as both sides looked eagerly today to the high tribunal's decision day for a possible Wagner act ruling.

Course of the crackling debate over sit-down strikes also hinged today on that long-awaited decision as the Senate prepared to take up again the controversial Byrnes amendment to the Guffey coal bill, prohibiting striking or discharged employes from remaining on company property.

Court plan foes are hopeful they will be able, through conferences of Senators Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, and O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, to swing most anti-court plan Senators back of an amendment extending Federal power over labor and industry.

Would Belie Roosevelt.

Their plan is to obtain signatures to such an amednment without attempting to substitute such legislation for the pending Presidentially-drafted bill, and thereby to damage Mr. Roosevelt's argument that agreement on an amendment is impossible.

Leaders in this movement, unwilling to be quoted, said yesterday they expect the opposition to call a meeting for the purpose in the near future, at which time it is hoped Wheeler and O'Mahoney can agree on a draft of a proposed amendment. The former is co-author with Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, of an amendment which diverges widely from the one proposed by O'Mahoney. It is believed if they can agree on a single plan, most opposition Senators will join them.

Party Rift Clearer.

As conferences went forward on this plan, the Democratic Party rift on the court issue became clearer. Wheeler's attack Saturday on the President's demand for bolstering consumer goods industries as against heavy goods was said yesterday in some circles to indicate the Montanan has broken completely with the Administration, and henceforward will not confine his opposition to the court question.

In the wake of his statement came one yesterday from Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, referring to a speech by Postmaster General Farley in Spring Valley, N. Y., Saturday. Holt said:

"The bold declaration of Postmaster General Farley that 'we will call the roll' of Congress is a dead give-away to the situation on the judicial reorganization plan.

"Think of that! A Cabinet officer saying that 'we will call the roll.'"

Mass Meetings Planned.

"It was stated Saturday by Senator Wheeler that the Department of Justice was trying to close the hearings on the bill. Has it come to the place that the Cabinet officers are to tell the Senate when to close hearings on a bill and then have the Cabinet officers 'call the roll.'"

Labor's Non-Partisan League plans coast-to-coast mass meetings on Patriot's Day, April 19, to enlist support for the bill, it was disclosed during the day.

Maj. George L. Berry, president of the league, said spokesmen for farm organizations would appear on several platforms with Congressional and labor friends of the President's court proposal. Organized labor also will participate in the league's court meetings, Berry said.

Law Disrespect Cited

Another Democratic Senator continued the offensive against the plan last night, when Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, said in a Boston speech that attacks on the courts had led to disrespect for law as evidenced "in the illegal sit-down strikes and many other ways."

"The attack on the courts, led by the President," he said, "has already done incalculable damage to the cause of constitutional democracy, which can not be made to function without respect for an independent and fearless judiciary.

"That there is a widespread and growing disrespect for law and order, none will deny. It evidences itself in the illegal sit-down strikes and many other ways."

Quotes Jefferson.

"That this condition is due in no small measure to the unrestrained attacks upon our courts, and the judicial process will, I believe, be the verdict of history."

Burke used a quotation which he said was from Thomas Jefferson as his theme in criticizing the President's plan.

"A king, hated and distrusted," the Nebraskan said, "was indicted by a freedom-loving people through the pen of the immortal Jefferson, in these words:

"'He has made judges dependent on his will alone.'

"Today the descendants of those free men are rising to challenge a President, beloved and honored, because of a heart-gripping fear that he is making judges dependent on his will alone."

Villard, Sommers to Testify.

The Senate Judiciary Committee will continue its hearings today, with Oswald Garrison Villard, editor emeritus of The Nation, and Dean F. H. Sommers, of the New York University Law School, on the stand. Tomorrow the committee will hear James Truslow Adams, historian, and C. C. Burlingham, attorney. All are opposition witnesses.

Meanwhile, the battle on the related issue of sit-down strikes is expected to be continued when the Senate resumes debate today over the amendment to the Guffey coal control bill offered by Senator James Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, a close friend of Mr. Roosevelt. Its acceptance by the Senate and its approval by the President would have the effect of placing the White House squarely in opposition to sit-downs.

Introduction of the proposal late Thursday came as a surprise to Administration leaders, delayed passage of the Guffey act and tied up the Senate Friday in five hours of blistering debate.

Administration lieutenants quietly lined up their forces over the week-end in an attempt to defeat the amendment if a compromise agreement cannot be reached which would bring about a vote on the issue in a different way.

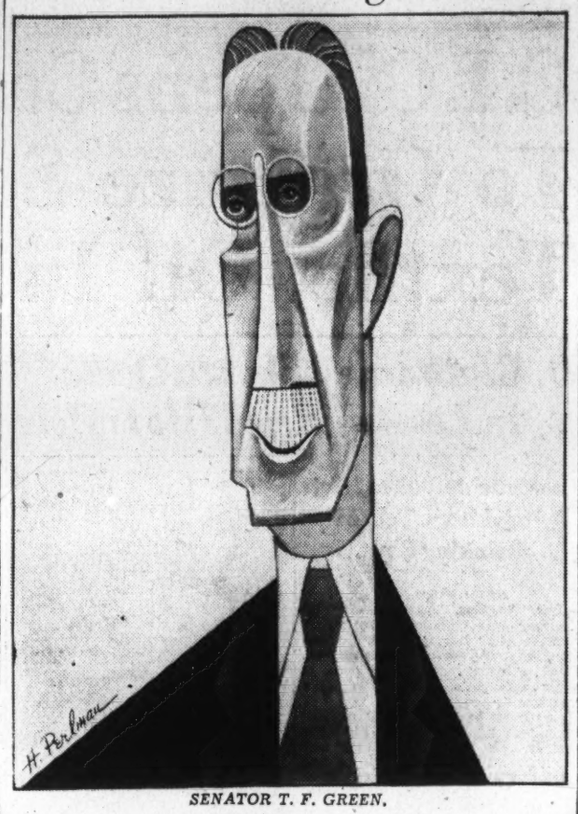
Five cases testing the Wagner act are before the Supreme Court for decision. They range from issues involving a bus company serving several States to the manufacture of steel and other products.

By presenting the issue in this manner, the Government hoped to obtain a clear-cut pronouncement of just how inclusive the court considers the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution to be.

Those who have been following recent developments here are virtually unanimous in believing that, whatever the court's decision, it will have great influence on the battle over the President's court bill.

New Faces in Congress.

Rhode Island's Senator Green Carries on Battling Tradition



SENATOR T. F. GREEN.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

His blue eyes twinkling behind silver-rimmed pince-nez, his U-shaped lower lip curving into a smile beneath a trim white mustache, Theodore Francis Green peacefully leaned back in his chair, crossed one athletic leg over the other, and confessed he comes "of a fighting family."

When his forefathers cast their lot with Roger Williams and settled down in the village of Providence, they were prepared to take part in every battle that reared its head in Rhode Island. "When there wasn't a row handy, they started one," said the Senator with a chuckle. "I've tried to live up to the family reputation."

Could his fighting forebears have looked forward through the years and followed, tussle by tussle, the two terms Green served as Governor of his State, they probably would have agreed, "Teddy's carrying on right well."

Fought After Defeat.

It seems this scion of a long line of American patriots first had his pugnacious proclivities aroused in 1912 when he was defeated in his race for Governor. If people thought he would henceforth forego his political ambitions and retire to some ivy-clad college or teach the rest of his life, they didn't know their Green. Or maybe they had forgotten he was a descendent of Nathaniel Green, plucky Revolutionary general. Anyway, the idea of throwing up his hands in surrender before a Republican machine that seemed to have a deathless grip on "Little Rhody" never once occurred to this dyed-in-the-thread Democrat.

He plunged into the political fray with more determination than ever. In 1920, he vainly sought a congressional seat. In 1928, he ran for Governor and was defeated. In 1932 he ran once more and became the State's first Democratic Governor in a number of years; then faced the most difficult fight of his entire career—that of keeping his ship of state afloat with Republican majorities in both branches of the legislature. His success in this struggle is borne out by the fact that when he ran for re-election, in 1934, he polled the largest vote ever cast for any candidate for any office in Rhode Island. Two years later, he accomplished another startling feat—won his way to Capitol Hill over veteran Jesse Metcalf.

Ready for Battle.

After all that, any battle the Senate has to offer won't bother Green one bit. He has already unsheathed his sword in the Supreme Court fight. "I'm with the President," he said. "We must have a change in the judiciary, and I don't see any other feasible way to bring it about. A Constitutional amendment? We'd never get a change that way."

A linguist, an authority on Roman law, a devotee of daily exercise (swimming, tennis and wrestling), and a connoisseur of Chinese art, Green is also a champion of the poor man, although he is a millionaire. He has taken an active part in countless civic and benevolent projects in his State for many years; has lent moral and monetary support to no end of hospitals, boys' clubs, schools, art and historical societies and planning commissions.

In October, he will celebrate his seventieth birthday. Is a bachelor and has no "official hostess" in the Capital. When he was Governor, his sister acted in that capacity. When she fell ill and could not come with him to Washington, his friends inquired solicitously what he was going to do about supplying a hostess for his household. In a spirit of levity he replied he would "probably have to advertise for one." When this report got in the newspapers, the Senator was beseiged with offers. Letters from women all over the United States poured into his mail box—most of them accompanied by photographs. With so many lovely ladies to choose from, the Senator doubts he will ever be able to make up his mind.

Cheap Housing Held Menaced By State Taxes

PWA Aide Sees Danger If Levies Do Not Favor Slum Projects.

State tax laws, unless they are changed to discriminate favorably toward public housing projects, may "hamstring" the slum clearance and low cost housing program envisaged in the Wagner-Steagall bill now stalled on Capitol Hill, Howard A. Gray, director of PWA housing activities, said yesterday.

His statement was issued by the PWA in official form, but his remarks were made in an article written for the American City magazine. Issuance of the statement by PWA came as another government department, the Treasury, was continuing skeptical of the bill's financial provisions, which it contends require funds not provided in the budget.

Gray said that "without at least partial exemption from ad valorem taxes, no proper public housing can be operated," and that of 26 States which have authorized public housing, 11 failed to provide for adustment of taxes.

The PWA statement said, in part: "Municipal officials, Gray declares, must understand that low-income groups living in blighted areas never have been able to pay for the services they receive from cities; that these areas always have been on the red side of tax ledgers, and that slum propert, purchased by PWA averaged three years delinquent in taxes, until PWA paid the bills at time of purchase. To impose full ad valorem taxes on public housing projects would be to increase taxes on their occupants from 400 to 600 per cent, based on a study of actual projects. Ad valorem taxes would mean charges of $2.50 to $7 per room per month for taxes alone.

"Instead of ad valorem taxes, Gray proposes that State legislation allow public housing projects to make payments in lieu of taxes to be based on a percentage of the rent income of the development. Tenants then would be paying taxes in proportion to their means, he points out.

"In return for this partial exemption, taxpayers should expect regulations to be set up preventing any but low income families from becoming tenants of public projects. To insist on full ad valorem taxes as is being done in some instances, he emphasizes, would be to throw such a burden on the projects that rent charges necessary for operation would make them competitive with bona fide private enterprise. Partial exemption would keep public housing out of such competition."

Bandit Steals Cab Of Woman Driver, Then Robs Friend

Police yesterday were holding Richard S. Watson, of Lynchburg, Va., for investigation after he was identified, they said, by Alice E. Willoughby and Everett H. Burrow as the man who robbed Miss Willoughby of her taxicab, and Burrow, his companion, of $5 and a watch.

Miss Willoughby, 1202 G street southeast, a cab driver, reported to police that she picked up the two men Saturday night at Sixth street and Potomac avenue southeast, and drove them to an address on Benning road southeast, from where they asked to be taken to Falls Church, Va.

When she stopped for a light at Fourteenth and Water streets southwest, she was forced out of the cab at pistol point by Watson, she told police. Burrow reported that he, too, was held up and put out of the taxi a few minutes later. He said that he was relieved of a bill fold containing one $5 bill and a watch.

Watson was arrested after he had run through a park on lower Fourteenth street.

Bituminous Operators Will Pass Increase On to Consumer.

By William V. Nessly.

The Nation's coal bill went up $100,000,000 a year yesterday, directing attention afresh to the broad subject of prices which has aroused comment by President Roosevelt and lesser figures in recent days.

J. D. Battle, executive secretary of the National Coal Association, issued a statement in which the association made it plain that the cost of the wage increase granted by bituminous coal operators to the United Mine Workers last week will be passed on to the public, along with "other increases in 1937 production costs incident to social security and other taxes and higher prices for supplies and materials."

"The industry cannot absorb these increases in the cost of mining coal," the association said.

"The profit margin under the previous wage scale and without the new costs in other directions was small at best and nonexistent with a vast majority of the producers. If they are to meet these increased costs and remain in business, they must of necessity obtain substantially higher prices for bituminous coal. Conservatively estimated, 25 cents a ton on the average will no more than cover the advance in production cost, of which the wage increases constitute the predominant but not the only factor."

A similar course was followed in the steel industry a few weeks ago, a general wage increase and adoption of the 40-hour week being followed almost at once by a boost in prices.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference Friday, hit specifically at the higher steel prices, in saying the Government will curtail its expenditures in the work relief program, for steel and similar durable goods, with the idea of assisting the consumer goods industries by increasing purchasing power of those at the bottom of the economic heap.

The President said the boost in steel prices was between two and three times the amount of the wage increase. However, the American Iron and Steel Institute, almost simultaneously, had issued a statement declaring the wage advances and "soaring prices for many raw materials" had increased steel manufacturing costs by $215,000,000 a year, while it is estimated the price increases would add only $200,000,000 a year to revenue of the manufacturers.

It was estimated that the wage hike added $130,000,000 annually to steel pay rolls.

$85,000,000 Rise for Miners.

The coal miners' pay boost is estimated to bring them $85,000,000 a year additional, a combined pay-roll increase in the two industries of about $215,000,000 yearly.

The combined additional estimated revenue from the price increases in the two industries, $200,000,000 in steel and $100,000,000 in coal, totals $300,000,000, about 40 per cent more than the wage increases, which the industries insist is necessary to cover increased costs in raw materials and equipment.

The Coal Association statement said:

"The reluctance of the operators to agree to increases in wages at this time was because of the realization that any increase in production cost must inevitably increase the cost of fuel to the consuming public and also because of the realization that by reason of competitive conditions with competing fuels increased prices for bituminous coal were apt to be detrimental to the industry."

The labor contract under which the industry has operated for 18 months, it pointed out, provided a 5-day, 35-hour week "and wage scales which in the aggregate represented a 100 per cent increase over the depression low and which were substantially above the scale prevailing in almost any other major industry, even after taking into account the recent wage increases in other industries."

It then related the demands the miners' union had presented, the 30-hour week, pay scale increases, time and a half for overtime, two weeks annual vacation with pay, and a guaranteed minimum of 200 days of work a year.

"The cost to the industry and the consuming public had all of these demands been granted," the statement said, was variously estimated at from $225,000,000 to $300,000,000 per annum.

"The new contract which finally resulted was a compromise. It represented substantial concessions by both sides. From the standpoint of the United Mine Workers it was less than they originally demanded. From the standpoint of the operators it was more than they felt the consuming public ought to be asked to pay."

The new contract retains the 35-hour week, but provides pay increases for day and monthly men, for "yardage and deadwork," boosts the pick mining rates and the machine and cutting, and provides a daily pay increase for men on mechanical loading and conveyor devices and to all employes producing in strip mines. The accepted provision for time and a half for overtime was called by the association "a brand new proposition so far as the bituminous coal industry is concerned."

Navy Develops New Radio 'Spy' To Locate Enemy Craft at Sea

Navy Department offifficials disclosed yesterday development of a "radio spy," by which enemy warships can be located or tracked long dinstances at sea.

Rear Admiral Harold G. Bowen, engineer in chief of the Navy, first reported development of the device by the department's radio direction-finder experts to Congressional appropriations committees which handle Navy funds.

Bowen declined to make public details of the "radio spy," filing such information with the committees under a "confidential supplement."

Navy officers, while saying the development was "secret" and could not be discussed, added that it was possible it would be given its first comprehensive test in naval meneuvers to be held in the Alaska-Hawaii sector in the Pacific this year.

Under the same "confidential supplement" Admiral Bowen also requested funds for the development of a system of cryptography by which warships can transmit signals to another vessel in the fleet which cannot be deciphered by an enemy vessel.

Bowen said the Navy was bringing Navy vessels up to the minute in radio equipment by replacing old sets with the newest modern apparatus.

"There are about 2,000 radio receivers in the Navy, and about half of them are obsolete insensitive and can be interfered with easily," he said. "We have requested funds to replace them with modern equipment."

Two types of portable radio equipment now are being installed on warships. One type, which requires six men to handle, will be used to maintain communication between ships and advanced bases by landing forces. The other set, designed to be carried on a man's back, is to be used by landing forces in action and for inshore operations.

Reserve Board Will Buy Bonds In Open Market

Committee Drafts Plan to Acquire U. S. Issues for Members.

out by the committee in close collaboration with the Treasury.

The statement, moreover, leaves open the question as to what amount of support the committee may feel desirable and full reservation is expected as to when it may be expected to go into the market.

Coincident with the open market committee statement, the Reserve board issued its monthly bulletin yesterday carying figures which showed country banks and reserve city banks gained reserves between the last half of February and March 12, while central reserve city banks lost, "owing in part to shifts in bankers' balances."

Borrowing Is Held Down.

"In view of the large amount of excess reserves remaining after the increase in requirements . . ., member banks were able to make the change with very little borrowing," said the bulletin.

"In February and March," the bulletin continued, "there was a substantial volume of sales of Government obligations, both by banks and by other holders. These sales reflected in part adjustment of reserve positions by banks in connection with the increase in reserve requirements, and in part other influences, particularly profit-taking at the high levels of prices reached in recent months. * * *

"Between February 17 and March 10 deposits of other banks with weekly reporting members declined by about $300,000,000. This figure includes a substantial amount of duplication. . . . Altogether $130,000,000 was withdrawn from New York City banks and $170,000,000 from reporting banks in other leading cities. * * *

"There has been continued reduction in recent weeks in the amount of United States Government securities held by reporting banks. Unlike the decline in these holdings during the last half of 1936, which occurred only at member banks in New York City, the decline since the beginning of this year has been at reporting banks outside as well as in New York. * * *"

Total Shows Decline

"From the end of December to March 24, United States Government securities held by reporting member banks declined by $545,000,000, of which $370,000,000 was in the last three weeks of the period. A portion of the retirement reflected the net retirement of $200,000,000 of maturing Treasury bills . . . Holdings of New York City banks declined by $110,000,000 in January and February and by $240,000,000 in the three weeks ended March 24, and those of reporting banks outside New York City declined by $120,000,000 in the five weeks ended March 3 and by an additional $130,000,000 in the two weeks ended March 24."

The open market committee, personnel of which was revised recently, includes other than the reserve board of governors, George L. Harrison, president of the New York reserve bank, vice chairman; B. A. McKinney, president of the Dallas reserve bank; J. S. Sinclair, president of the Philadelphia bank; W. McC. Martin, president of the St. Louis bank, and W. A. Day, president of the San Francisco bank.

Europe Sends $3,500,000 to U. S. Each Day

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury, measuring the sustained "flight" of foreign funds into the United States, reported yesterday capital imports have aggregated $2,606,749,000 in the last two years, or about $3,500,000 a day.

The report brought conjecture over what, if any, steps the Administration will take to stem the inflow.

Heavy capital imports tend to accelerate the upswing in prices, which has drawn expression of concern from Administration spokesmen. In addition, any sudden withdrawal of the funds might precipitate a price collapse.

Treasury, Federal Reserve Board and Securities Commission experts have been studying methods of checking the capital influx for several months. Thought has been given to possible new taxation on foreign holdings here, but officials said today no workable scheme has been formulated.

Eight Billion Sent In.

The Treasury report, together with Commerce Department and other statistics, indicated foreign funds in this country now exceed $8,000,000,000. Besides the powerful influence foreign holdings may exert on normal domestic economy, some authorities have feared they might be used for big-scale war buying in event of a conflict abroad.

Covering 1935 and 1936, the report said that $1,360,312,000, or more than half, of the $2,606,749,000 net capital inflow was in short-term banking funds. This so-called "hot money" is available immediately for spending or withdrawing.

A total of $1,233,587,000 went into securities, the Treasury said. Officials asserted they could not accurately gauge the influence this foreign buying has had in jacking up American security prices, but that it undoubtedly was an important factor.

78 Per Cent From Europe.

Of the total captial inflow, $2,051,312,000, or 78 per cent, came from Europe. The United Kingdom supplied $829,336,000; Switzerland, $335,545,000; France, $299,536,000, and The Netherlands, $229,684,000.

Capital inflows since January 1 were not included in the report, but gold imports, which roughly reflect the inward movement, have totaled about $300,000,000.

At present the Treasury is operating a gold "sterilization" program designed to offset effect of capital import on domestic credit.

Soldiers Slay 75 Lepers in Chinese Town

Missionaries Tell of Massacre; All Homes Are Looted; Village Burned.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, April 4.—The slaughter of an entire village of 75 lepers by Kwangtung provincial soldiers was described in letters received here today from American Presbyterian missionaries at Yeungkong, in southwestern Kwangtung. Brief telegrams had reported the tragedy previously.

For 25 years the Presbyterian mission had been the principal means of support of the village, near Yeungkong, 125 miles southwest of Canton. The mission had given medical treatment under which some of the lepers were nearly cured. All had professed Chrisitianity. Twenty were women.

One letter said the military carried out their "barbarous act early Easter morning while the Christian world was celebrating the most important occasion of Christianity."

The soldiers worked a ruse, promising the lepers 10 cents each daily if they would remain within their village. For three days the money was distributed.

Early Easter morning an army detachment arrived at the village, ostensibly to give more money. Instead the lepers were bound, carried to a nearby hill and all shot. Their bodies were dumped in a lime-filled ditch.

After that, the missionaries reported, the soldiers looted the lepers' huts, seizing everything of value and then burning the village.

Physicians here and in Kwangtung asserted the affair would set back the fight against leprosy in China for many years. They feared sufferers would hide their disease to avoid similar executions and thereby spread the scourge.

Girl, 12, Mother Are Assaulted And Murdered

Los Angeles Pair Brutally Beaten With Brick in Bedroom.

By the United Press.

Los Angeles, April 4.—The partly clad bodies of a middle-aged woman and her pretty 12-year-old daughter, both beaten with a brick and both apparently criminally attacked, were found in the bedroom of their downtown apartment today.

Mrs. Edna Worden, 48, her skull crushed, was found half in and half out of her bed. Her daughter, Marguerite Estille Worden, lay on another bed, her head smothered in pillows.

Both had been beaten. A blood-stained brick lay in a corner. Police said it was certain the girl had been assaulted.

The child's father was believed to be R. A. Worden, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. His name was on a letter addressed to the girl and dated March 5.

The slayer apparently gained access to the tiny, two-room hillside apartment through a kitchen window, which was open when police arrived. Although the apartment was on the second floor of the six-story apartment building, the steep slope of the ground made the window easily accessible.

Both victims apparently had been dead for two or three hours when the apartment house manager, J. G. Harrigan, looked in this afternoon and saw the room a shambles.

Mrs. Worden was clad only in a nightgown.

Blonde and pretty, Marguerite had been struck just under the temple. The imprint of the brick was discernible on the backboard of the bed, indicating it may have been hurled by the murderer before he assaulted her. She was wearing only the upper part of her pajamas.

Police examiners said the child evidently had died before her mother. A blood-soaked pillow pressed over her face led police to believe she may have been smothered to death.

On a window pane detectives found a fingerprint. Outside the kitchen window, they discovered footprints leading to the alley at the rear of the building.

Investigators said robbery evidently was not the motive as the apartment was not ransacked, although Mrs. Worden's purse was found open.

Navy War Games To Test Cruisers, Defense of Hawaii

San Pedro, Calif., April 4 (AP).—Defense of Hawaii and tests of new "vest pocket cruisers," new sky cruisers and new submarines will feature the Navy's annual war games beginning April 16.

From that date until April 28 the floating forces will cover 5,000,000 square miles of ocean between Alaska, Hawaii and California, in the climax of the year's training activities.

Six weeks of action will find 139 ships and 474 fighting aircraft engaged in millions of miles of flying, thousands of takeoffs from carrier and by catapult from warships, and intricate problems of sky navigation and return to moving bases.

Rings, Lavaliere Lost.

The loss of three rings and a lavaliere was reported to police last night by Paul Clayton, of 4519 Arkansas avenue northwest. Clayton is a copy editor in the Government Printing Office.

Libyans Credit Duce For Producing Rain

Rome, April 4 (AP).—To many of the natives of Italian Libya, Premier Mussolini has become the great giver of rain.

During his recent visit to Italy's north African domains, the Arab and Berber population were praying for rain for their crops and pastures.

During the last few days an extraordinary rainfall has answered their prayers, and today many of them were attributing it to the intervention of Il Duce.

2,738 Trespassers Killed.

By the Associated Press.

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday 2,738 illegal train riders and other trespassers on railroad property were killed in train accidents in 1936. This, the report said, was a high mark for any year since 1923, with the exception of 1933.

Business Failure Blamed on Curse Of Mummy Hand

Liverpool, England, April 4 (U.P.).—The "curse" of a mummified hand, said to have belonged to an ancient Egyptian princess, brought him to financial ruin, P. D. Cursi, former Liverpool businessman, revealed tonight.

The grisly hand was given him by his father as a relic. Cursi's wife objected, he said, and begged him to throw it away. He laughed at the widespread superstition of the "curse of the Pharaohs" and joked with friends about the hand.

Then his long-established business slackened. A debtor owing $10,000 committed suicide. The firm, unable to raise the money, failed.

the coast of Italy. It was then the mother moved back to Charlottesville with her children, never to receive visitors again. Grief-stricken, she became a recluse on her estate.

After attending Amherst College, where he played football in several major games, Thomas Olney Greenough continued his education at Cambridge University in England, accompanied by his brother Robert. Previously he had met a girl in Brooklyn, N. Y., who was in love with him.

At Cambridge he received a telegram from the Brooklyn girl stating she was gravely ill and he rushed across the Atlantic to be with her. She was not ill, and admitted her cable was a ruse to get him to America. They were married and returned to England to live. Not long afterward they were divorced and young Greenough returned to his mother's Virginia estate, where he acted as manager.

Planned New York Visit.

He was going to New York to see his brother, Robert, last night when the station wagon struck the four colored men, he told police. Arlington police later verified the fact Robert was in New York. Robert telephoned he was hurrying to Washington, Va., to help his brother.

The dead men are Walton Fletcher, 20, and Nathan Fletcher, 28, brothers living in Washington, Va. Henry Starks, 38, and William Roy, 26, the survivors of the weird automobile deaths, were seriously hurt. Starks suffered a broken hip and several broken ribs. Roy was badly bruised. Both will live.

Deputy Sheriff L. H. Hitt, first to arrive at the scene of the deaths, said by long distance telephone yesterday that he found the two bodies still lying in the road, the injured Starks nearby and the fourth man a few feet beyond.

Hitt stated he took the injured men to the office of Dr. John Snead in Sperryville for treatment and at once telephoned on ahead to various county officers to be on the lookout for the speeding station wagon. The call was relayed to Washington, D. C., and police broadcast it here. It was picked up by Arlington County Officer Lillard.

Unable to Escape.

Hitt declared the two survivors told him they tried to evade Greenough's car and fled in terror as fast as possible off to the side of the road away from the pavement, but could not escape.

Greenough was removed from Arlington County Jail at noon yesterday and taken to Washington, Va., by State Officer R. E. Wood and Arlington County Officer James Lillard. He had been held overnight in Arlington on charges of leaving an accident.

Taken back to the scene of the deaths Greenough was formally charged with voluntary manslaughter, according to Rappahannock County Prosecutor Frank Moffett. Reached by phone at the Washington Jail late yesterday, Greenough said he would have nothing to say except through his attorney. He expressed concern that the story of his midnight ride should be printed.

Mrs. Greenough, his mother, described as "a beautifu woman of extreme wealth," could not be reached yesterday at her estate. Friends said she was recently confined in a hospital, but has since recovered.

Young Girls Lose Virtue by Liquor, MormonChiefSays

Salt Lake City, April 4 (AP).—Keep "liquor out of the home," President Heber J. Grant of the Latter Day Saints Church admonished 760,000 followers the world over in a bitter attack today on foes of prohibition.

"Young girls have lost their virtue because of liquor in homes of church members," he shouted to thousands gathered for the Mormons' 107th annual conference in historic Salt Lake Tabernacle.

When girls "drink, they lose their sense, they become drunk and stupid and lose their virtue. I know what I'm talking about," tall, gray-bearded Grant asserted.

"I warned the people not to vote for repeal of the eighteenth amendment," declared the 80-year-old, but still vigorous president. "The money spent for liquor, tea, coffee and tobacco would save the world financially."

Johnson to Seek New Court Action On Child Labor

By the United Press.

Encouraged by the Supreme Court's reversal of a 14-year precedent to uphold State minimum wage legislation, Senator Edwin C. Johnson (Democrat), Colorado, announced last night that he will seek a similar change of attitude on child labor.

Johnson said he will introduce today, in somewhat modified form, the Federal child labor act passed by Congress and approved by President Wilson in 1916. The law was declared unconstitutional in 1918 by a 4-to-4 decision of the Supreme Court, and to uphold the act now the court would have to reverse a 19-year precedent.

"I cannot recall a decision of the Supreme Court which has been received with more popular satisfaction and approbation than the court's finding in the minimum wage case," Johnson said. "The American people applaud the wisdom an dcourage displayed by the majority of the court in frankly acknowledging that the doctrine laid down in the famous Adkins case is erroneous.

"It is not too much to hope that the court will display equal wisdom and courage if afforded an opportunity to review its decision in the child labor case."

George Ade Hits Change in Court

Indianapolis, April 4 (AP).—George Ade, Hoosier humorist and author, assailed President Roosevelt's court reorganization plan today in a statement released here.

"We are headed for a virtual dictatorship, and such a finish was never contemplated by the founders of our Government," Ade said.

"I am merely a layman, with no claim to expert knowledge regarding the merits of the cause he (Roosevelt) is pleading, but I know I am right in my conclusion that he hopes to subordinate the legislative and judicial branches of the Government to his own will and become the one-man ruler of our destinies.

"In my opinion he is adopting a policy which is unprecedented, dangerous and possibly destructive of our liberties. He is hatching huge plans for reconstruction of the whole social order, abolishing poverty and delivering prosperity to the ill-housed, the scantily fed and all those who suffer the penalties of the underprivileged.

"Even those who are compelled to wonder if he can change human nature and confer lasting benefits to the laggards, the sluggards, the incompetent, and the unwilling are ready to admire the noble intent of his desires."

Age Diseases Gain as Death Is Pushed Back

Doctors Dream of Time When All Will Die at Limit of Longevity.

the entire United States registration area were taken in Federal reports. Statistics since 1934 are not yet available.

There are five types of heart disease. One, hereditary, with little or no remedy. Two, thyroid, with new surgical operations and treatments doing much to prolong life. Three, syphilitic. Physicians think that this can be stopped completley. Four, rheumatic, for which there is preventive nutrition, and for children, warm climate. Five, degenerative. Treatment can prevent early disability.

Cancer, second cause of death, took 140,000 lives in 1934, a rise of 6,000 over 1933. The American College of Surgeons records 25,000 verified cures of cancer by surgery, X-rays and radium.

Nephritis, the kidney disease, killed 106,000 in 1934, an increase of about 5,500 for that year. There are numerous treatments. It is one of the diseases expected to decrease as general health grows better.

The fourth disease, cerebral hemorrhage, killed 97,000 in 1934. This was a 7,000 increase. Treatments include skillful nursing, puncture of the spine, the value of which is in dispute, and operations for removing blood clots. This is one of the diseases in which syphilis is a contributing cause of death.

Tuberculosis ranks fifth on the 1934 figures. It is the only one among the first ten whose death rate is going down. It killed 71,000 in 1934 and 3,000 more the year before. Since written history began, this disease has taken the largest toll of human lives of any disease, until the last 15 or 16 years. Statistics since 1934 are expected to put it still farther down the scale into sixth or seventh place.

Pneumonia Rates Sixth.

Sixth place in the 1934 figures went to lobar pneumonia, highly fatal, striking at all ages and killing 54,000. That was 9,000 over 1933. In the same years bronchial pneumonia killed, respectively, 41,000 and 37,000. Vaccines have been tried in pneumonia with some success. But there are four types of the disease and each requires a different vaccine.

Premature births rank in eighth place with 35,000, which was an increase of about 2,000 over 1933. Better prenatal care is the remedy.

Diabetes ranks ninth with 28,000 deaths, an increase of about 1,200. This is one of the diseases in which intelligent attention to medical advice can save many lives. To insulin has been added recently protamine insulin, a new effective remedy for very bad cases.

May Be Hereditary.

Elliott P. Joslin, M. D., of Boston; Louis I. Dublin, Metropolitan Life statistician, and Hergert H. Marx, of New York City, reported this January to the American Medical Association evidence that diabetes is hereditary. This promises a new weapon in ability to head off the disease early.

Tenth cause in diseases of the arteries. Deaths were 27,000 in 1934 and 25,000 the year before. Here again age comes in as one of the general causes of the disease, with prospects that treatments which delay aging and improve general health will be increasingly effective.

How long might a person expect to live if old age were the only cause of death? Anatomists, says the Journal of the American Medical Association, say that animals live five times the number of years necessary for full growth of their skeletons. Man's skeleton takes 21 years to grow, and five times that is 105 years.

3 Colored Patients Flee District Hospital

Three colored men, all mental cases according to the police, broke out of Gallinger Hospital late last night.

Paul Hill, 22, indicted for housebreaking, was awaiting trial. Raymond Wilson, 22, had been sent to Gallinger by the Board of Public Welfare, and Melvin Gay, 15, by the District Training School.

Grace Ellery Channing, Writer, Is Dead at 75

New York, April 4 (AP).—Grace Ellery Channing-Stetson, 75, journalist, poet and one of the few feminine war correspondents to serve during the World War, died here tonight. She was a direct descendent of William Ellery, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and was a native of Providence, R. I.

Mrs. Stetson, who was a special correspondent on the French front in 1916, and later with the Alpine Divisions of the Italian army, always opposed isolationist policies of the United States Government. Under her pen name of Grace Ellery Channing, she was a frequent contributor of short stories, poems, and essays.

Jacksonville, Fla., April 4 (AP).—Alexander Jordan Mitchell, 76, a veteran of 41 years service with the United States Weather Bureau, died here today. Mitchell, who retired in 1932, was for 38 years in charge of the Jacksonville station of the Weather Bureau. Previous to that, he served for a time with the central office in Washington.

Insurgent columns were thrown against the advancing government lines in two vigorous attacks near Puerto Calatraveno, north of Espiel, on the main highway running northwest from Cordoba City, vital line of communications for Gen. Queipo de Llano's insurgent army.

Government reports of the action admitted government forces withdrew a little for a counter-attack, which was launched with airplane and tank co-operation. The ground temporarily lost was regained and government lines advanced further.

Dispatches from the northern front asserted government forces had extended their southward advance on the road from Santander to Burgos. They reached the outskirts of the town of Sargentes, more that halfway to Burgos, after thrusting back insurgent defenders. The battlefield there was reported strewn with insurgent dead.

The Basque regime, loyal to the government, reported from Bilboa that an intensive artillery bombardment had destroyed insurgent defenses at Lequietio, on the coast northeast of Bilboa, and killed large numbers of insurgents. The Basques reported that the insurgent drive against Bilboa, now in its fourth day, had been halted all along the front, which forms a semicircle south and east of the Basque capital.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Song recital by Nelson Eddy (Theodore Paxson, accompanist) in Constitution Hall Sunday afternoon. Program: "Bois Epais" (Lully), "Gloire a Vanna" (Fevrier), "None but the Longing Heart" (Chaikovski), "The Old Corporal" (Dargomizhski), "Child's Evening Prayer" and "By the Walls of Kazan" (Musorgski), "Fruehlingsreigen" (Fleischmann) "Der Tod, das ist die kuehle Nacht" (Paxson), "O was ich mich betruebe" (Smetana), "Zur Johannisnacht" (Grieg), "The Bell Man" (Forsyth), "Bone Come A-Knittin'" (Wolfe), "Serenade" (Carpenter).

Packing Constitution Hall to its capacity and occupying most of the stage, Nelson Eddy's admirers had a happy time yesterday afternoon listening to the personable young barytone, saluting him with salvos of applause at every opportunity, and demanding as many extra numbers as his good nature and generosity would grant. Whether his song was from the classic repertoire or from the light opera shelf, from Lully's "Amadis de Gaule" or Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," the applause was impartially thunderous.

In view of that unquestioning receptivity, one must credit Mr. Eddy with his good taste in building a program designed to please both his auditors and his own evident predilection for artistic standards. There was certainly no concession to popularity in his choice of operatic arias by Lully and Fevrier and the lieder by Fleischmann, Paxson and Grieg, yet there was an unmistakable bid for favor in the selection of "Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt" from the 117 songs of Chaikovski.

From the standpoint of musical values, the recital was not as satisfying as the one Mr. Eddy gave here a year ago. His voice was not in as good condition as on the previous occasion, a fact attributable to the heavy season through which he has just passed. His upper tones were frequently constricted and their resonance veiled. Moreover, there was a certain amount of monotony in his treatment of serious songs, a lack of that accent which bespeaks a vital interest in every phrase.

When he turned to entertainment there was more vivacity and a free use of mimicry for humorous effect, as in Musorgski's "Evening Prayer," Varlaam's narrative of the siege of Kazan from "Boris Godunov" and the plaint of stuttering Wenzel from "The Bartered Bride." But this energy was not consistently sustained and one had the definite impression of a weariness in the singer.

Among the extra numbers which interspersed and followed the formal program were Monro's arrangement of "My Lovely Celia," Musorgski's "Son of the Flea," Erich Wolff's "Du Bist So Jung," Jensen's "Am Ufer des Fluesses," Halliday's "Chumleigh Fair," Herbert's "Sweet Mystery of Love" and "Water Boy."

Ludendorff, Backed by Hitler, To Push 'Nazi God' Movement

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 4.—Gen. Erich Ludendorff indicated today he intends to take an active part in the Nazi conflict with the church, especially in pushing the attacks of his "German God" movement — Deutsche Gotterkenntnis—against the old religious orders.

In Munich it was disclosed that in tomorrow's issue of his magazine, "At the Holy Source of German Power," Ludendorff will declare that Reichsfuehrer Hitler in their recent meeting agreed to give Ludendorff's movement a recognized status.

The World War quartermaster general, in a statement framed like an army order, told his leaders the principle at stake is "the welding together of the people in a totalitarian state." He declared he was determined to ward off powers seeking to undermine the unity of the German people—meaning the Catholic Church and Freemasonry.

Another clash between the church and Nazi authority was disclosed in dispatches from Darmstadt. Four confessional Protestant pastors were arrested there for defiance of Nazi orders.

Chief of them was Bernhard Brandt, assistant to Frederick von Bodelschwingh, whose election as evangelical bishop of the Reich in 1933 never was made effective owing to his clashes with the then newly established Nazi power.

Confessional leaders had convoked a so-called "evangelical week" at Darmstadt to prepare for the coming church elections, fixing of the date of which has been delayed by the government owing to "technical delays."

Nazi authorities objected to this meeting because two Swiss churchmen were invited to address it in addition to anti-Nazi churchmen from other parts of the Reich. This, officials said, was likely to lead to "a breach of religious peace."

Resistance to an order to disband led to the arrests.

Confessional leaders asserted they would refuse to participate in the coming church elections unless the pastors were released.

Japanese Admiral Plans Visit to the Philippines

Tokyo, April 4 (AP).—Admiral Seizo Kobayashi, governor general of Formosa, will visit the Philippines next summer in the course of an inspection tour of lands of the southwestern Pacific, the Domei (Japanese) News Agency reported today.

Purpose of the tour, which has approval of the foreign office and the ministry of overseas affairs, was stated to be development of good will toward Japan and increasing Japanese understanding of her southern neighbors.

Lindberghs Nearing Goal.

Zagreb, Yugoslavia, April 4 (AP).—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, returning to England from a two-month airplane tour of the Near and Middle East, arrived at Zagreb at 3:25 p. m. today (9:25 a. m., Eastern standard time) after a flight of nearly five hours from Athens. Visibility was poor and airport officials said the Lindberghs probably would not continue their journey until tomorrow.

Profitless War Bills Attacked By Policy Unit

By the Associated Press.

The Foreign Policy Association said yesterday pending legislation to take profits out of war contained a legal basis for establishing "a dictatorship bearing much more severely on the press and labor than on industry."

The association's views were expressed in a report prepared by Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the organization, and Prof. Harold Tobin, of the political science department of Dartmouth College.

The report followed by a day expression of apprehension by some members of the House lest the legislation be interpreted abroad as a militaristic gesture. The House Military Committee has made plans to consider the legislation during the week.

No Specific Provisions.

The association said that while none of the several bills before Congress contains specific provisions authorizing drafting of labor or press censorship they "contain provisions that might be interpreted to authorize these practices."

The measure introduced by Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, and Representative Hill (Democrat), Alabama, was described by the association as including sections to establish "control" over any "material resources, industrial organization and public services."

Under another section of the bill, the association said, the President may draft men into any military service "in the event of war, or of a national emergency declared by Congres to exist." The association report then contended:

"Thus a President might induce Congress to declare that a serious labor trouble constituted such an emergency; or he might conceivably produce a situation which would lead Congress to declare war against a small country—as a pretext to mobilize man power in support of the establishment of a dictatorship at home."

No Drafting Power

Another bill by Senators Nye (Republican), North Dakota, and Connally (Democrat), Texas, the association said, contained no authorization for military conscription "either in the event of war or national emergency, apparently in the belief that even if war is declared, Congress should exercise its own judgment."

"While those who favor strict control over industry find much to criticize in these bills," the association said, "those who believe in the effective prosecution of the war and fear arbitrary government power also have ground for apprehension. The very fact that the powers granted to the President are subject to wide differences of interpretation increases the possibliity that the President may exercise them so as arbitrarily to injure private enterprise.

"Thus it is possible to believe that the tax provisions of both sets of bills may be applied in a confiscatory sense."

U. S. Woman Separates From Italian Marchese

Milan, Italy, April 4 (AP).—The Milan civil tribunal today granted legal separation to the Marchesa Stefano D'Amico, the former Olive Elizabeth Perkins, of New York, from her millionaire husband. The marchese, an Italian cotton manufacturer, did not contest the action. The hearing was conducted behind closed doors.

It was understood the marchesa intends to file an annulment suit at Lugano, Switzerland. The marchesa brought suit for legal separation March 1, charging desertion and cruelty. The couple were married in 1922.

French Town Prepares For Wedding of Edward

Rouen, France, April 4 (AP).—Excited villagers of Saint Saens, undaunted by denial of reports the Duke of Windsor and Mrs. Wallis Simpson would wed there, began a polish-up campaign today, just in case.

They cleaned windows and doorsteps, and Mayor Jean Hartout said he would buy a new dress suit to keep on hand should he be asked to perform a civil ceremony. The Journal de Rouen said yesterday it was reliably informed the duke and Mrs. Simpson would be married at the Chateau de Saint Saens, near Rouen. Mrs. Herman L. Rogers, spokesman for the prospective bride, denied the reports at Monts, France.

Court to Resume Sanity Test of Husband Slayer

Los Angeles, Calif., April 4 (AP).—The parade of psychiatrists in the sanity hearing of Helen Wills Love, husband slayer, will be resumed tomorrow in superior court.

The sanity hearing for the woman who lapsed into a seven-day coma shortly before she was to be sentenced for second-degree murder in the slaying of her husband, Harry Love, broker, in Santa Monica, New Year's Eve, was started last Friday. The hearing was ordered by Judge Frank Smith, who deferred sentence and declared a doubt had arisen in his mind about the 31-year-old woman's sanity.

Plane Built to Test Stratosphere Flying

Burbank, Calif., April 4 (AP).—An airplane for experimental work in the stratosphere is being constructed here and probably will be completed within two weeks.

Although secrecy has shrouded the construction and factory officials said they could not discuss the matter, the plane, it was understood, would be delivered to the United States Army. Fliers generally believed the Army intended to resume stratosphere flying where it was left off by the late Wiley Post, who was killed in Alaska on a flight with Will Rogers.

San Francisco, April 4 (AP).—Conquering the hysteria to which she surrendered upon learning her I'll-chase-you romance had gotten into court, Mrs. Nan Pierson Brooks Macy Brill left here today planning to retrace her wild flight from Los Angeles and fight an annulment suit.

She was still in possession of a big roadster registered to her husband, William Brill, 25, on whose trail she set police when he disappeared shortly after their Yuma, Ariz., wedding March 29.

China Band Raids Japan Consulate

Tokyo (Monday), April 5 (AP).—Two daring raids by organized gangs of Chinese bandits in eastern Manchukuo, one against a Japanese consulate, were reported today by Domei (Japanese) News Agency dispatches from Harbin.

One band swooped down on Linkow, attacked the Japanese consulate and a Japanese police station and set fire to a Japanese school. The bandits were driven off only after several hours of fighting in which both sides suffered numerous casualties.

Near Yanglintzu another band of 100 outlaws held up a column of Japanese motor trucks, killed one Japanese and two Manchukuo policemen and sacked and wrecked the trucks. Four Japanese and six Manchurians were missing after the attack.

Evolution Theory Foe Accuses Reds

Indianapolis, April 4 (AP).—Fiery-tongued Verdi Allen, Beech Grove preacher who has gained wide attention by his onslaughts on evolution teaching, accused Communists today of spreading their theories in the guise of evolution.

"We are living over a volcano," he shouted to approximately 1,000 persons who gathered at a tabernacle here. "Some of our school teachers won't even pledge allegiance to our flag."

Brushing back his hair and waving his arms, he branded Hendrik Van Loon, Connecticut author, as "a Communist."

Allen has started a campaign against the teaching of Van Loon's book, "The Story of Mankind," in Indiana public schools. He became bitter in his attack after reading notes in Beech Grove children's notebooks saying man came to earth "as an ape-like animal."

New Delhi, India, April 4 (AP).—Sir Robert Cassels, commander in chief of the army in India, left for the northwest frontier today following reports of growing unrest in that area.

His immediate destination was Peshawar, capital of the northwest province, where the fakir Ipi has opposed British rule for more than 30 years.

Hostile tribes of the Waziristan frontier of the northwest were reported active following fighting with British troops March 29. A British outpost near Razmak was attacked, and telephone lines have been damaged extensively. Ipi, however, was reported to have announced he was consulting other Waziristan tribes to see whether they were willing to negotiate for peace.

Philadelphia Bridge Team Takes Trophy

Fourth Annual Old Dominion Tourney Most Successful; Play Is Close.

By Marian H. Barre.

The open-pair contest in the Old Dominion bridge tournament ended in a victory for Mrs. R. C. Young and J. S. Jackson, of the Philadelphia group of bridge stars who have wrested so many championship trophies from the local experts. Two young Washington players, A. A. Roth and O. Brotman, put up a strong fight for the Richmond News-Leader cup, trophy for this event, losing the match by 14½ points. The winners scored 328 match points, the runners-up, 314½. Third and fourth positions also went to local pairs, Lewis R. Watson, jr., and Thomas Hamlin, and E. B. Conolly and J. G. Stone, with 286½ and 282 points, respectively. A Harrisburg pair, T. R. Wickersham and F. E. Bentley, were in fifth place with 281 match points.

A consolation game was run simultaneously with the finals for players who were eliminated in the afternoon qualifying round. As only 32 pairs out of 66 could qualify, the "second-flight" section contained some of the best tournament talent. It was run as a straight Mitchell game, open pair finals being run with a McKenny-Baldwin movement. Trophies for the north-south players in the consolation section were won by Mrs. A. Rosenbloom and Mrs. W. S. Hall, with Miss F. F. Wilkins and Ellis Butt, bridge editor of the Virginia Pilot, second. All four players were from Norfolk, Va. Mrs. R. M. West and C. B. Pennebaker who won east-west were not eligible for trophies as players with master point qualifications could not compete in that section. Free entry fees for the team match were awarded in lieu of prizes, the trophies going to the runners-up, Mrs. T. M. Boyle and Charles Shaw.

Sixteen teams enrolled in the team match, held in two sessions Sunday, beginning at 11:30 a. m. W. M. McIntyre, A. P. Stockvis, E. B. Conolly and Herbert Shepard were the defending champions of the Schwarzchild Brothers' trophy. Charles H. Goren captained a team consisting of himself, Mrs. R. C. Young, J. R. Crawford and J. S. Jackson; they play as the team of Brotherly Love. The Salaskys, doctors both, brought a strong team from Richmond. The Lemons, Thurtell and Kunkel were another serious threat, as were the Urqharts and the Quiers. Another Capital team was composed of Mrs. Stockvis, O. Brotman, Mrs. M. R. West and L. R. Watson, jr.

After 28 boards had been played in the first session, the Salaskys, H. J. Gerst and N. Wilson were one board up on two teams tying for second place, a Washington team of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hussey, Miss Frances Skelly, and Karl Greene, and the Goren foursome. Capt. V. de Sveshnikoff, H. R. F. Brett, T. A. Walton, and E. E. Harrell were in fourth place, with the Lemons, Kunkel and Thurtell, fifth. The champions of '36 were trailing far down the line.

At the conclusion of the match, the Goren outfit were on top with the Lemon team just a board behind, 39 to 38 boards. Capt. de Eveshnikoff's team tied for third place with the Salasky team, 35 boards each, and H. R. King, A. L. Westrich, Dr. A. J. Steinberg, and I. H. York were fifth, with 34 boards.

Goren had defeated the Captial experts once more, but the margin was a narrow one.

This fourth annual tournament for the Old Dominion Championship was the most successful held in the State.

New Florida Canal Fight Is Forecast

By the Associated Press.

Battle lines re-formed quickly yesterday around the revived Florida canal issue as conflicting opinions within the corps of army engineers came to light.

Members of Congress who favor as well as those who oppose construction of the canal found support for their positions in two reports filed Saturday with Speaker Bankhead. Maj. Gen. Edward M. Markham, chief of engineers, recommended completion of the cross-State waterway and the department's river and harbor board was reported to have said the canal was economically unsound.

Neither report will be made public until delivered to the House tomorrow, but members of the Florida House delegation were permitted to see them.

Representative Green (Democrat), Florida, an advocate of the project, insisted Markham's decision was the controlling report. The board's findings, he said, constituted only a recommendation to Markham.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, leader of the canal opopsition in the 1936 Congress, said it was "highly creditable that the board held the project was economically unsound." He predicted canal legisaltion would face a hostile Congress.

"January 1, 193: A new year and I am still crazy about Bobby."

"January 19, 1933—Raced around trying to get married. Not as easily as it sounds. What a job! Ended in N. J. Still not married. Got a corky ring."

The last piece of confession of Ronnie's "five years of my life" which the police gave out was:

"January 7, 1934—Saturday Sid and Carl over to Jean's. Went to a show with Ethel. Had a quarrel with Sid. He an imbecile for his age—40—good night!"

Ayer Prize Won By Newspaper On West Coast

Los Angeles Times Leads N. Y. Herald-Tribune; The Post in First Ten.

The Los Angeles Times took first place in the annual N. W. Ayer newspaper typography contest, it was announced in Philadelphia last night.

The Washington Post, last year's third prize winner, was among a group of ten survivors in the final eliminations in a contest which embraced 1,501 newspapers.

Second award among large papers of more than 50,000 circulation went to the New York Herald Tribune. Third went to the Des Moines Tribune.

Others in First Ten.

Other papers in the final ten survivors were the Buffalo Evening News, the Richmond Times-Dispatch, the Baltimore Sun, the Milwaukee Journal, the New Orleans Item and the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The advertising agency judges announced the Miami Herald won for newspapers of between 10,000 and 50,000 circulation, while in the group of papers of less than 10,000 circulation, the Evening Tribune, of Hornell, N. Y., was first.

A new trend in newspaper typography was evinced by the selections of the judges, B. C. Forbes, publisher of Forbes Magazine; Arthur Robb, editor of Editor and Publisher, and William A. Kittredge, typographer of the Lakeside Press, of Chicago.

The Los Angeles Times has modernized its "dress" and uses a new type face, Sans Serif, in its headings, which are set flush with the left of the column.

Abandons Column Rules.

The Glendale News Press, of Glendale, Calif., which finished second in the 10,000 to 50,000 group, uses the same headings and has furthermore dispensed with column rules. The Glendale paper also used blue ink in its title and on its first-page headline. The Des Moines Tribune printed a page 1 "art ear" in red.

The exhibition, which was open to all daily English language newspapers published in the United States, was confined to issues of Thursday, March 4.

Symbolical of the major victory is a one-third claim on the Francis Wayland Ayer Cup, offered by the N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc. The newspaper winning three times gets permanent possession. The contest, begun in 1931, has resulted so far in the New York Herald Tribune winning one cup. A second cup is now in competition.

Increased Exports Reflected in Sharply Rising Prices; Japan Scours Markets in Eagerness to Purchase.

Tomorrow is the twentieth anniversary of America's entrance into the World War. For a week The Post has been taking stock of this country's armed forces on land, on the sea and in the air. This, the eighth article, takes up another aspect of the war preparations abroad.

By Edward T. Folliard.

Not so long ago, in Harford County, Md., a gang of men stole a 15-ton steel bridge, reduced it to sections and sold them at a junk yard. About the same time, man-hole covers began to disappear from the streets of another Maryland comumnity, and they, too, ended up at a junk yard, swelling the mountain of scrap formed by cast-off locomotives, automobiles and plows.

FOLLIARD.

By this time, the stolen bridge and the manhole covers probably are on their way to Japan, England or Italy, there to be melted down and refashioned into battleships, tanks or high-explosive shells.

That is merely one aspect of the tremendous influence the armaments race in Europe, plus Japan's huge preparedness program, is having on America 20 years after this country went into the World War.

It probably would not be too much to say that the arms race is causing a "boom" in America's heavy industries. But instead of exulting over this "political buying" from abroad, President Roosevelt and other responsible officials are deeply disturbed by it.

Undoubtedly the arms race and the stocking up of reserve supplies by foreign countries have had something to do with soaring prices in this country.

President Roosevelt pointed out that the price of copper had doubled in one year. The answer to that may be found in export figures just published by the Department of Commerce. These showed that the value of copper exports in February of this year totalled $7,068,805, about double the total of $4,503,435 in February of 1936.

Essential in Munitions.

Since copper is an almost indispensable factor in munitions, battleships and other weapons of war, and since Great Britain, Japan and the others show no signs of easing up in their armament programs, the prospect is for a continued heavy demand on this country for that valuable metal. And that would seem to portend a continuation of the high price.

The boom in the scrap iron field is much more spectacular and much closer to home.

So great has become the export of scrap, so steeply has the price of it gone up and so much has the domestic supply been reduced, that leading figures in the steel industry are genuinely alarmed and are planning to ask the Federal Government to adopt, at least a partial embargo.

Scrap, of course, plays an important part in the making of steel, being used to temper the raw iron.

Would Curb Exports.

At a recent meeting of steel executives in New York a committee was formed to promote the passage of legislation to curb exports of iron and steel scrap. In a 24-page pamphlets entitled "Scrap Exports Menace America," the steel men said that the great outgo of scrap not only was a threat to business recovery, but a threat to America's national defense as well, seriously endangering the naval building program.

A day or so later Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, introduced a bill which would prohibit the export of scrap steel except upon the issuance of a license by the President. The bill, offered "in the interests of national defense," was referred to the Military Affairs Committee.

Associates of Senator Schwellenbach said his bill was inspired not by the steel men meeting in New York, but by manufacturers in his own State. These manufacturers have seen vast quantities of scrap shipped from the West Coast to Japan, leaving an ever-rising price behind.

Figures Tell Story.

Department of Commerce figures graphically show what has happened in the field of scrap metals. In normal times in the past, the annual shipments of scrap to foreign countries averaged less than 300,000 tons.

In 1935 scrap exports jumped to the astounding figure of 2,103,959 tons, with Japan the leading purchaser.

In 1936 scrap exports fell off to 1,941,031 tons, with Japan buying up most of it. This reduced export business was not due to any diminution in the desire for scrap; it was caused by the higher prices.

Scrap that once brought only $2 a ton at junk yards now brings $7, and by the time it reaches a steel mill in this country it brings more than $20 a ton.

Japan, more than any of the other powers, is desperately in need of scrap. There exi sts in Japan a "pig iron famine," and as a rseult the naval end military plans of the Nipponese empire are seriously threatened. Having no great ore supply herself, Japan has been scouring the world for scrap to supplement what she does have. Now the rising price in this country and the possibility of an embargo have added to her worries.

Soviet Cuts Exports.

To make matters worse, Soviet Russia, incensed by Japan's anti-Communist pact with Germany, is cutting down on the amount of scrap that may be sold to Japan.

But despite the rising price of scrap, the steel men who met recently in New York predicted that exports in 1937, unless curbed, would reach 3,000,000 tons.

If an embargo, or a curb of any kind, is placed on scrap exports, it would be the second metal so treated by Congress. A year ago, in the interest of national defense, Congress enacted a law to prohibit the export of any tin-plate scrap except upon a license issued by the President. This country imports all of its virgin tin. The de-tinning industry, which recovers tin from scrap, produces about 30 per cent of the country's requirements, and it was to assure this industry of scrap that the law was passed.

Scrap Men Organized.

The steel men are not going to get their embargo on scrap iron and steel without a fight. Scrap iron is now big business. The men who scour the country, salvaging everything from an iron bolt to a ghost ship off Solomons Island, have their own organization—the Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel, Inc.—and they are prepared to suggest that if scrap be embargoed then let pig iron and finished steel be embargood too.

Just how much of the foreign buying of American products is due to the armament race and how much due to the general economic pick-up is a question impossible to answer.

But, as has been said, Government economists don't like a boom caused by war preparations. They say it gives the whole economic structure an artificial base. If the arms race should suddenly halt the result might be a collapse of the price structure. If—worse fear—it should lead to war, nobody knows what the effect would be. During and after the last war, Europe bought heavily in this country with borrowed money. If there should be another war and this country is not in it, there won't be any lending and consequently there won't be as much buying.

Articles on Veteran Relief Won Gold Medal for New York Paper.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—Talcott Powell, author, magazine writer and former newspaperman, died today following an appendix operation which he underwent last Sunday. He would have been 37 April 27.

Powell, who lived at Old Greenwich, Conn., was editor of the Indianapolis Times from 1933 to 1935, when he left that post to devote all of his time to magazine writing and exploring.

Last year, in a chartered schooner which he himself navigated, Powell cruised through the West Indies and along the coast of Venezuela. During this trip he discovered and excavated the site of the town of Caparra, established in Puerto Rico by Ponce de Leon in 1510 and abandoned in 1521.

In 1932 the Pulitzer Prize Committee cited his articles on veteran relief published by the New York World Telegram in awarding to that newspaper a gold medal for the "most meritorious public service" performed by a newspaper during the previous year. He was assistant executive editor at the time.

Powell, a native of Lansdowne, Pa., was educated at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn. He began his newspaper work in 1920 as a reporter for the Trade Journal in New York. He served in various editorial capacities on the New York Sun, the New York Tribune and the New York Herald Tribune before going to the New York Telegram in 1927.

Cocktail Bars Battle Montana's Brass Rails

Helena, Mont., April 4 (AP).—The choice between a brass rail and a "dude" cocktail lounge was a hot issue in Montana today. The saloon, a Western institution, returns to the State tomorrow.

Prospective saloonkeepers disputed the merits of the modernistic, softly lighted cocktail lounge, and the sawdust-covered floor and "stand up and drink 'em" bar of six-shooter days.

Prices And War Preparation.

Inquiry following the President's statement on prices has developed the fact that the present high prices of copper are not the result of any preconceived plan by the producers of that commodity. On the contrary, it was just because the producers were opposed to high prices and sold their production ahead for several months at around 10 to 12 cents that they completely lost control of the market. Buying abroad appears to have been a major factor in the copper price situation, the export market leading the advance over the domestic market.

In this connection there can be no doubt that the buying of raw materials by European countries is part of a preparedness program for war. These raw materials are, for the most part, going into storage rather than actual manufacturing.

There can also be little doubt that the mandatory neutrality program under contemplation by this country is an important factor. If this country is to lay embargoes against both sides in a future war, regardless of which side takes the offensive, no nation will be able to rely on us for supplies that can be obtained in adequate quantities only in the United States.

It would be folly for countries to ignore the possibility that supplies from America will be cut off, even in the face of an unprovoked attack, at the moment when these will most be needed. If the United States were in a position similar to that of some European countries which have no offensive plans and are preparing only for defense, we would be pursuing a similar policy.

No More Morro Castles.

One of the most comprehensive investigations ever made in this country on safety at sea has been completed by a group of experts working with the Senate Commerce Committee. While other groups have talked and wrangled, these experts have quietly devised a program which, if rigidly adhered to, may completely eliminate major disasters at sea. At any rate, it would make the repetition of tragedies such as those of the Morro Castle and the Mohawk in 1934 and 1935 virtually impossible.

According to the Committee on Commerce, its experts have devised a method of producing "absolutely fireproof ships" without "adding excessively to the cost or weight involved." "The fire on the Morro Castle," says the report to the committee, "showed clearly what might happen on almost any of the passenger ships now afloat." For most of their interiors are built of wood and other inflammable materials. Within a short time a fire can transform such a vessel into a horrible inferno.

Experiments sponsored by this board of experts led to the development of a form of construction "in which combustible material was eliminated to such an extent that combustion can not be sustained by any part of the ship's structure." To these precautions the experts would add the most rigid rules ever devised for fire detection and extinction.

Other strict standards of marine architecture would likewise be enforced. The board is confident that the Mohawk would never have gone down, at a cost of 45 lives, if that vessel had been properly divided into watertight compartments. Under the safety plans now brought forward every vessel would be so constructed that it would remain afloat even if one portion of it should be flooded.

A bill to carry out these safety provisions has been unanimously recommended for enactment by the Commerce Committee. It would assign to a bureau of marine inspection and navigation the responsibility of enforcing both architectural and personnel standards. Thus the issue of utilizing available knowledge to prevent tragic loss of life at sea is presented to Congress in a way that can not be easily ignored.

Rear Admiral George H. Rock served as chairman of the investigators and Prof. H. S. Seward, of Yale University, as vice chairman. Their work stands out in pleasant contrast to that of the Subcommittee on Safety at Sea which was recently abolished by the Secretary of Commerce because of internal friction and the alleged publicity-seeking of one member. It is well to recognize, however, that the major tasks—enactment and enforcement of these new standards—are yet to be achieved. That work calls for the full support of the Department of Commerce, whether through a new committee on safety at sea or otherwise.

Torn From The Context.

No aspect of the controversy over enlargement of the Supreme Court has aroused more resentment than the distortion of facts and statements employed to build up a case for the President's proposal. Morever, misrepresentation of this sort ultimately produces indignation tending to defeat its own purpose.

Dr. Edmund A. Walsh is not the first student of constitutional history to point out the abuse of Chief Justice Hughes' remark to the effect that the Constitution is what the judges say it is. The misleading implications of that quotation when torn from its context, were fairly well known when the President repeated it in his fireside chat of March 9. Yet he used only part of Mr. Hughes' sentence, taking it from a paragraph that was actually a eulogy of the courts and an argument for impartial judicial review.

If this instance of distorted meaning stood alone, it might be dismissed as an inadvertent error. But the President also gave an unwarranted twist to the words of Associate Justice Stone. Assailing the Supreme Court in his broadcast of March 9, he said:

> In the case holding the New York minimum wage law unconstitutional, Justice Stone said that the majority were actually reading into the Constitution their own "personal economic predilections"...

The actual words of Justice Stone were:

> It is difficult to imagine any grounds, other than our own personal economic predilections, for saying that the contract of employment is any the less an appropriate subject of legislation than are scores of others, in dealing with which this court has held that legislatures may curtail individual freedom in the public interest.

A suggested explanation of influences affecting the majority opinion in that case was transformed into a positive and damaging charge.

In both of these instances the President misused statements by Supreme Court justices to bring discredit upon the institution of which they are a part. Such tactics are especially unfair and unsportsmanlike because men in these high judicial positions cannot set the record straight in their own defense. Still more flagrant in some respects, however, was the President's actual misquotation of the Constitution. The following paragraph will be found in his address of March 9:

> But the framers went further. Having in mind that in succeeding generations many other problems then undreamed of would become national problems, they gave to the Congress the ample, broad powers "to levy taxes . . . and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

The actual language of the Constitution, as apparently referred to, is:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States . . . .

Mr. Roosevelt's version makes it appear that the organic law gives Congress sweeping powers to legislate for the "general welfare." When the full text is given, the general welfare clause is seen to be a qualification of the taxing power, as the courts have traditionally construed it.

Such casual distortion of the fundamental law by the President cannot be laughed off as unimportant. Especially is that true when the President is endeavoring to pack the Supreme Court to give effect to his own interpretation of the Constitution. Those who support this plan should be the first to insist that deceptive and irresponsible advocacy should not be allowed to increase the popular distrust already so clearly apparent.

Bookmakers On The Run.

It is considerably more difficult to place a bet with a bookmaker in Washington today than it was a month ago. Those few bookmakers who are still in business are operating with great discretion, in desirable contrast with their former brazenness. This is partly because they no longer have direct wire communication with race tracks, which makes last minute "hedging" difficult; but it is more because they are fearful of joining the many booked at police headquarters on gambling charges.

It was March 10 when the first assault on the bookmakers was ordered. Due to a leak, a raid on a racing news bureau became necessary before the full forces of the law had been organized. Nevertheless, the head of the organization was caught and now faces not only gambling charges but also a suit to collect unpaid taxes. Moreover, sufficient information was obtained from his files to warrant other raids throughout the city. In the course of these, evidence of illegal activities on the part of a rival was discovered. As a result, both these agencies have suspended business completely. And, with the raids still continuing, hundreds of gamblers now await prosecution in the District courts.

For all this, the city owes its Police Department, the District Attorney's office and the Treasury Department fullest thanks. Gambling, it is generally conceded, can never be completely obliterated. But at least it can be kept to a minimum, as the effects of 48 recent raids testify. The problem now will be to keep the bookmakers and their assorted subsidiaries on the run.

Europe's Uneasy Friendships.

In the present uneasy state of Europe, bilateral peace pacts only too often have the effect of producing multilateral suspicions.

Yugoslavia's agreement with Italy establishing a modus vivendi in the Adriatic is a case in point. After 18 years of strained relations, sometimes reaching dangerous heights, the Rome and Belgrade governments recently buried the hatchet. Since the Adriatic had long been regarded as one of Europe's danger spots, this development had much to recommend it. Actually, however, the Belgrade agreement has aroused anything but enthusiasm in neighboring lands.

Czechoslovakia and Rumania, Yugoslavia's partners of the Little Entente, are perturbed over the latter's seeming abandonment of collective security in favor of a bilateral arrangement with Italy. Giving substance to their suspicions and fears is the fact that there is no clause in the Italo-Yugoslav treaty stipulating that it be registered with the League secretariat. Such procedure is required of all members. Furthermore, Yugoslavia has now implicitly recognized Italy's suzerainty over Ethiopia, thus breaking the hitherto united front of the Little Entente on this question.

France, for its part, is worried by the seeming readiness of its Yugoslav ally to take an independent line. The suspicion is harbored at the Quai d'Orsay that the Belgrade treaty constitutes a victory for the Fascist powers. Berlin and Rome have not concealed their intentions of detaching European states from the League by means of bilateral agreements.

How justified these suspicions are remains to be seen. From the Yugoslav point of view the concessions offered by Italy were too attractive to be ignored, regardless of what the governments at Paris, Prague and Bucharest might think. Yet it is doubtful whether, as some charge, Yugoslavia intends to break away either from the Little Entente or from the French bloc generally. Its obvious desires are not only to live on terms of amity with Italy but to retain its old friendships as well.

In the meantime the Belgrade treaty has equally alarmed Italy's partners. Hungary can hardly view with complacency the implied abandonment by Mussolini of his hitherto steadfast support for the cause of treaty revision. On the other hand, Austria has begun to feel that it has been left in the lurch by Italy in return for German support of Italian interests in the Mediterranean.

Eager to resume complete independence of action, the Schuschnigg government has begun to make friendly advances to Czechoslovakia. It is also rumored that the Vienna government has been making soundings in Great Britain and to a lesser extent in France as to the willingness of those powers to replace Italy as Austria's guarantors.

Czechoslovakia's response to these Austrian overtures has been friendly but skeptical. The feeling obtains in Prague that Austria may be seeking Czechoslovak good will only to boost the value of Austria's friendship in Italy's eyes. Thus while Premier Hodza did not in any sense reject Vienna's olive branch, he did take occasion, even while declaring himself in favor of good relations between Czechoslovakia and Austria, to reiterate his opposition to any restoration of the Hapsburgs. The practice of looking gift horses in the mouth is universal in the Europe of today.

And Hyacinths.

We have it on competent authority that a good deal of adult sympathy goes out to the small boy who declared that he hated useful presents. He figured that an all-wise Providence would see to it that life's necessaries, food and clothing and the like, would automatically appear. What he wanted was life's extras, such as candy, cake and baseball gloves.

On equally good authority we are assured that the ideal gift is something the recipient has always desired but never, never, never would "waste" money in buying.

Many heads of institutions know these fundamentals and would willingly act accordingly if funds and conscience would permit. But there is a chilliness about organized charity and many items that do credit to the heart would cut a poor figure on a balance sheet.

And so Mrs. Clementine Farr Duff, whose recently listed bequests included a trust fund for the Washington Home for Incurables, must be credited with wisdom as well as kindness. Out of the fund ice cream is to be provided "in generous quantities" for both patients and employes. It is the quoted phrase that makes the donation noteworthy.

A man motorist gives a woman driver the right of way, and any part or all of a street, highway or other area she seems to think she wants. He doesn't do this because he is chivalrous, but because for some obscure reason he wants to keep on living.

A Kansas City woman says the reason women are such poor drivers is because the men teach them to drive. Maybe so, but a person scared within an inch of his life makes an exceedingly poor teacher.

And then there was the murderer who was so crazy he didn't have sense enough to plead insanity.

More For Mr. McCall.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Tom McCall says: "Lee was a high officer in the United States Army and what did he do?" Merely this: When the crisis came and he had to make his decision he followed the dictates of his conscience instead of the voice of self-interest; and refused the highest position in his profession—commander in chief of the United States Army—to join the Confederacy, though he knew from the beginning that it was doomed to failure.

Who can blame him for doing his duty as he saw it? When the war ended, he neither gave himself up to bitterness and vain regret over the past, nor tried to capitalize on his great name; but bent all his energies toward rebuilding his ruined country, and setting an example to his people of cheerful acceptance of the new order of things. He refused the offer of a home in England and an annuity of $15,000, saying: "I must abide the fortune and share the fate of my people."

Many business positions of high honor were offered him, with the statement that no work would be required of him, his name was all that would be required. To these he replied that his name was not for sale. Instead, he accepted the presidency of an obscure Virginia academy, consisting of five professors and forty students; and till the end of his life worked as devotedly at the task of building up this little college as he had done toward leading a great army.

It is for these reasons that the people of the South revere him and resent so bitterly any slight, however seemingly small and unimportant. Theodore Roosevelt called him "the greatest general of the English-speaking races." But he was more than that—the noblest character that ever lived.

Mr. McCall goes on to say: "The North has forgotten that war." Yet not fifteen years ago, when a bill was presented in Congress to restore the Lee mansion at Arlington, a meeting of G. A. R. veterans passed a resolution protesting against it in these words: "Lee was a traitor and if he had had his deserts would have been hung on the highest gallows in the country." If Lee was a traitor, so was Washington. The only difference is that one succeeded and the other failed.

MARY B. OWEN.
Washington, March 31.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have no comments to make of the article in The Post of March 31 signed by Tom McCall. His ignorance is more to be pitied than censured, but I do wish to express my surprise that The Post should have been so hard up for fillers as to be willing to publish such maudlin comments of the South, thereby wounding the feelings of 50 per cent of its subscribers and aiding in keeping alive that sentiment which Mr. McCall has so falsely accused the South of.

I did not realize that in this enlightened age there was a high-class publication in the country that would publish Gen. Lee a "rebel and a traitor" and certainly not The Post, which counts its friends by the thousands in the South.

FRANCES HILL HORNE.
Washington, April 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was glad to read in today's Post Mr. Tom McCall's letter calling upon the South to forget about the war between the United States and the Confederate States. Mr. McCall says the South can't "take it," that the Confederates were "rebels and traitors," and he compares Lee with Benedict Arnold.

That sort of thing is just what we Southerners need to keep us from forgetting. Too many of us nowadays are inclined to let bygones be bygones and to be politely acquiescent when Sherman, Grant, and Abraham Lincoln are hailed as sacred heroes. The South has done nothing but "take it" for the last 75 years.

Upon reading Mr. McCall's letter I remembered with a certain grim satisfaction the words of Melanie Wilkes in "Gone With the Wind."

"I can't forget. I won't forget . . . I'll teach my grandchildren to hate these people—and my grandchildren's grandchildren if God lets me live that that long!"

I heard my own grandmother express the same sentiments when I was a child. She lived through the war and through the reconstruction and I am willing to take her word for it that she had sufficient provocation.

Baxter's Bugler.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I thought you might be interested in reading the attached letter which contains friendly references to you and your paper.

J. B. MITCHELL, M. C.
Washington, April 1.

Hon. J. R. Mitchell, M. C.
Washington, D. C.

Friend Ridley: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, inclosing a clipping from the editorial page of The Washington Post, entitled "Blow, Bugler Blow." Thank you for sending me this clipping.

The clipping refers to our mutual friend Mr. Charles Hughes, of this place. And I think The Post has him pictured wrong. His bugle blowing performance is merely a hobby with him. And I do not think it is to attract attention to himself, but rather following out the precept of an old adage which he probably read in The Post years ago: "It pays to advertise."

And he is merely trying to toot the message to the world that Baxter, Tenn., situated as it is in this beautiful Cumberand Mountain section, near the great Norris Dam, and near the great Cumberland River basin. And surrounded with mature's great picturesque beauty. Endowed as it is with pure air, water and plenty of sunshine, good roads, good churches, and a school second to none in the State, Baxter is the garden spot of the South.

And I honestly believe if the editor of The Post could spend two weeks in this vicinity, he would gladly sit on the other side of the same pole with a saxophone and toot the same tune.

Again I thank you for sending me this clipping, and wish you continued success.

I am, with all good wishes, your friend. W. V. COLE.
Baxter, Tenn., March 29.

Decorating Dogs' Graves.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why this controversy about decorating a friendly dog's grave with an American flag? I am sure there is no harm done to anyone. People who remember their dead animal friends in some such way are also usually lovers of humanity and just give vent to the love and affection nourished in their hearts.

If those divine virtues were in every human breast, this world might be a better place to live in, and we would never read about cruel and ungrateful hitch-hikers robbing good-natured motorists who give them a friendly lift on the highways, casting their dead or dying bodies out and running away with ill-gotten gains.

Observation and experience teaches there is nothing more cruel than man's inhumanity to man, and that it is safer to trust a dog than some men in human form. So, why not pay everlasting honors to man's best friend—the dog?

RICHARD J. PAHNKE.

Y. M. C. A. And The Jobless.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why not have the Y. M. C. A. give the money it receives from the Community Chest to the 3,000 unemployed of Washington? If any man can give one good reason why the Community Chest should give thousands of dollars to the Y. M. C. A. when thousands are in want, I would like to hear it.

I recently spent four years in the dormitory of a Y. M. C. A. in a large city while unemployed and never received one suggestion, or assistance of any kind in locating a place in spite of my three university degrees. I paid my rent regularly. WILLIAM A. BROWN.

Thoughts On "Academic Freedom."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many of us are quite confused when we hear school officials and lecturers talk in favor of "academic freedom." The phrase is intriguing, but what does it mean? As reported the other day in The Post, the British lecturer, Mr. Laski, after remarking the source of opposition is "ugly in origin and devastating in effect," he then said: "The only obligation of the teacher is to bring the truth to those he serves, no matter where it may take him or no matter where it may take the United States."

The first question one could ask is, Who is the teacher, what is his background, is he competent, and does he believe in the spirit and principle of Americanism as expressed in the Federal Constitution?

In my 50 years of contact with public men — lawyers, doctors, teachers and experts in various lines of our social, industrial and financial life, as well as in civics, I did not find them equal in culture and mental ability; and very frequently, I found a great divergence of opinion among them. Some also had a greater ability to express themselves in choice language and to explain in better detail the elements in a given proposition. Some were as conservative as Calvin Coolidge, while others were as wild as Emma Goldman. The great majority, of course, were common, average, but splendid Americans.

However, despite all these variations in men, we still have the question before us: What is the truth! I've seen and heard many experts (?) take the same set of facts and figures and arrive at different conclusions. Abraham Lincoln said in a few words what it took Edward Everett two hours to say at Gettysburg.

Thus then, what of the school official and the lecturer—are they of a different mold? What intellectual food do they feed upon that no limit may be set upon their teaching and their conclusions? We set limits upon the Congress of the United States as to what they may legislate on and how. We set a limit upon the authority of the President of the United States. We set a limit upon judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States.

What authorities do the school official and the lecturer have access to, denied the average truth seeker—Solomon, Aristotle, Bacon, Washington, Jefferson, the Bible, are accessible to all of us to accept or reject. But has the teacher the right in the schoolroom to pass judgment on any one of them. And how is the teacher to know he has found "truth" in "An Economic Interpretation of the Constitution," by Charles Beard; or in 'The Coming American Fascism," by Lawrence Dennis; or the 'Ten Days That Rocked the World," by John Reed, to mention only three books.

Yet many of the present-day school officials and lecturers would put that obligation upon the much buffeted-about school teacher, who, in most instances, is scarcely more than an innocent bystander in the line of two contending philosophies. The one wanting absolute freedom to "teach truth" no matter the consequences; and the other, the conservative group, who prefer to go slowly in "proving truth."

And so we are back again: What is truth; and what is the meaning of academic freedom?"

I'd examine the textbooks used! Just who wrote the textbooks, and why were these particular ones selected? GROVER AYERS.
Washington, April 2.

Railroad Toots

A VETERAN engineman of the Maine Central Railroad discloses that the "tootology" used by the Maine Central is really a language all its own, and that the same "language of the whistle" is used by practically all American railroads.

Every toot of a locomotive whistle, the Maine Central employe discloses, is actually a message, directed either to the general public or to some railroad man along the line. A strict rule forbids all enginemen to sound a locomotive whistle unless there is an urgent reason for it.

Most persons know that the familiar "two long and two short" sounds of the locomotive whistle mean "look out," this train is approaching a highway grade crossing. "Of course," said the Maine Central veteran, "almost every day someone thinks we are just fooling, with the result that an automobile gets in front of a train. The shortest road I know of to the hospital or the cemetery is to forget that those two long and two short blasts on any locomotive whistle is a grade-crossing warning."

• • • •

The engineman was certain that a blindfolded railroad man could tell what New England State he was in by simply listening to any locomotive's crossing whistling. "You see," he went on, "we fellows at the throttle have to remember what State we are in when we start our whistling for crossings.

"For instance, let me show you the rules in New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine and New York, which read that the whistling is to be 'prolonged or repeated' (commencing at a marker set at a place prescribed by law) 'until the crossing is reached. In case of fast-moving trains the whistle signal shall be prolonged until the engine is on the crossing; in case of slow-moving trains the crossing signal shall be repeated, the last blast of which is to be as the engine goes on the crossing.'

"Now, that wouldn't do in Massachusetts, where the law prescribes: 'Engine bell to be rung from the whistling post to the crossing and, in addition, two long and two short whistles sounded just before reaching the crossing, the duration of the whistle to consume approximately ten seconds.'"

• • • •

All the other "toots" other than the crossing warnings have their own meanings. For instance, using a dash (—) for long "toots" and an (o) for short "toots," the railroad language of the whistle is, in part, as follows:

— ooo "This train is about to stop. Flagman, go back and protect the rear end of the train."

ooo (when train is tsanding): "This train is about to back."

ooo (when train is standing): will stop at the next passenger station."

— oo "We are calling attention of towermen and yard-engine crews that this train is carrying signals indicating that another section is coming behind us."

oooooooo (series of short toots): Warning to persons on tracks that train is approaching.

o — "Crew of this train, look it over at once for leaking air or steam hose connections or for sticking brakes."

— ooo — ooo "We have seen a fire along the tracks in some house or building." (In this case, the veteran explained, this signal is repeated when the train passes the next section (work) crew, tower or railroad station and railroad men start immediately to locate the fire and to give alarm and assistance.

The Main Central informant, by the way, asserted that "many fires, especially at night, have been discovered by enginemen of speeding trains and the whistle of warning very often resulted in the saving of lives and property."

(New York Times.)

The Mockingbird.

It is to be presumed that Tennesseeans generally are interested in the mockingbird. Since the gifted songster was chosen as Tennessee's State bird a few years ago, news concerning his physical, vocal or spiirtual welfare becomes a matter of official as well as personal concern, whether presented in the language of ornithology as the mimus polyglottos or in terms more appropriate to budding vales and purple hills as the mockingbird, of recent or fading memories—Tennessee's favorite feathered songster.

The mockingbird has not been among the early feathered heralds of spring (if this be spring, as the calendar suggests!); perhaps he is waiting for those faultlessly moonlit nights of a more certain season to air his wares, for which no one in these parts of the spiritual vineyard can be disposed to criticize.

However, in sunnier climes the mockingbird has already made his appearance, and—here is the news: in larger numbers than heretofore.

Out in California, the university people at Berkeley have definitely established the fact that while every other species of wild bird in that State is diminishing in numbers, the mockingbird family is increasing.

As a song bird, of course, the mimus polyglottos enjoys portection from wanton slaughter, but the University of California ornithological experts ascribe his increase to another reason. Additional tree plantings, it is said, have enlarged available places of rendezvous—and with a song like his, nothing more need be said.

Reactions Of Readers To The Supreme Court Proposal

Minimum Wage Law Verdict Pleases Reform Proponents

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial of March 30 on the minimum wage case you say that the Supreme Court's action ought to convince everybody that the court has not "arrogated to itself the use of super-legislative powers." You explain just how it is that the court does not "pronounce" acts invalid, but only "decides cases arising under laws." You say that this is an important point that is often overlooked by "Americans who do not really understand their system of government."

In 1916 there was a tie vote in the court on the Oregon minimum wage law. That means that the Oregon law could stay in force because the Oregon Supreme Court's ruling could not be reversed without a majority vote. Then in 1923 the District of Columbia law was held unconstitutional. This law was not much different from the Oregon law; at any rate, the court never bothered to point out any difference or to explain why one was worse than the other.

Then last June the majority of the court held that the New York minimum wage law was no different from the old D. C. law, and was therefore invalid. They said, in their opinion, that they were not considering the question whether they had been right or wrong in 1923 about the District of Columbia law. Why? Because the petitioner "does not ask to be heard upon the question whether the Adkins case should be overruled." If the court had been wrong in 1923, that was just too bad; the court couldn't do anything about it because the petitioner hadn't asked them to. When the attorney for the State of New York heard this, they petitioned the court for a rehearing, saying that they had asked the court to reconsider its 1923 decision. The court denied the petition without handing down an opinion.

And now the court decides that the Washington State law is constitutional. Is it different from the District of Columbia law which the court held bad? No. Every member of the court, minority as well as majority, agrees that there is no important difference. But the majority now says that the majority was wrong in 1923 about the District of Columbia law. Why didn't they discover that last June and save New York a great deal of confusion and delay in working out its labor policy? Because the court said that it hadn't been asked to look back and decide whether it had been right or wrong in 1923; therefore, it couldn't consider this question.

I should think that before taking the responsibility for holding a law unconstitutional a court would insist on looking at every angle of the question, whether they were formally requested to do so or not. But in the Washington State case last Monday, the majority of the court said that "the question which was not deemed to be open in the Morehead (New York) case is open and is necessarily presented here." So the court proceeds to reconsider its 1923 decision, and discovers that that decision was "a departure from the true application of the principles governing the regulation by the State of the relation of employer and employed."

The whole thing is pretty confusing to me, one of those "Americans who do not really understand their system of Government." And I have the idea that a mess like this calls for just a little "tampering with an institution so basic to the American form of Government?"

'To Avoid The Deplorable Confusion.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unless my data is incorrect, of all the laws enacted by Congress during its existence, only 70 have come before the Supreme Court on the question of constitutionality. It follows that laws not clearly within the bounds of the Constitution are rarely enacted. However, as in the recent cases occasioning this question, when law of doubtful constitutionality seems essential to problems of government, I suggest the following procedure:

1. The law shall be enacted in regular manner, but specifically designated as a law for declarative interpretation by the Supreme Court. The law so designated shall be immediately presented to the court for interpretative action, and as such shall take precedence over all routine matters before the court.

2. In case the law is declared constitutional, it shall become operative as provided. In case it is declared unconstitutional the law shall be re-enacted by Congress with the constitutional infirmity eliminated and resubmitted for interpretation. If this proves impractical (i. e., removing the constitutional infirmity without destroying the utility of the act) the law shall be re-enacted as a constitutional amendment.

3. The constitutional amendment shall then be submitted to the legislatures of the several States in regular manner except that copies of the law, together with whatever literature or argument is deemed advisable, shall be sent to each officer of the State, and in addition, to each member of the State Legislature there shall be sent an official ballot on which such legislator may vote on the question.

4. Upon receipt of the above notification, the Governors of the various States may, at their discretion, convene the legislatures (if not then in session or becoming so in time for the provisions of this plan to be effective) or they may advise the legislators that no session will be called and provide for receiving the ballots indicated in paragraph 3 above.

5. It shall be stipulated that action on the proposed amendment shall be completed within 60 days after notification, and that the Governor shall, at that time, report the success or failure of the proposed amendment, and, in instances where the legislature is not convened, submit with this report the official ballots of the members of the legislature. (These ballots are to be used only when it is not deemed necessary or expedient to convene the legislature in special session.)

Under the above plan, any law found unconstitutional can not become operative except by constitutional amendment in the identical manner as at present stipulated in the Constitution. The only departures from present methods are (1) that the court is called upon to interpret the law in terms of constitutionality before it has become operative, and thus avoid the deplorable confusion and expense that followed invalidation of the AAA, as an example, and (2) it prevents the insufferable dalliance that has attended the attempt to enact the child labor clause. Under its operation, a law could be enacted, declared unconstitutional, reenacted as a constitutional amendment, and either accepted or rejected as a part of the Constitution, all within the period of six months.

'The President Receives A Mandate.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The statement of Raymond Moley before the Senate Judiciary Committee is simply indicative of the differences in point of view between the Chief Executive of the United States and so many publicity seekers not answerable to anyone, with due respect to Mr. Moley. It must be conceded that the electorate at last election expressed its confidence in the Chief Executive.

And in the last three Congressional elections many candidates were carried into public office on the basis of the social and economic reforms advocated by the President. It is established by the overwhelming Democratic majority in Congress that the President has received a mandate from the American people to seek every legitimate legislative means to secure and make safe on a permanent basis the new conception of life which the past four years have opened in the country. This is what the President proposes to do in his plan for reforming the judiciary.

The prepared statement of Mr. Moley in substance indorses the objects the President seeks to achieve in the direction of social and economic reform, but differs with the President on ways and means—that is all. The President and his advisers have submitted very good reasons why their plan is best, and after all their responsibility lies directly to the people.

The first election in which a test of sentiment on the court issue was held indorsed President Roosevelt's judiciary reform program. Citizens in Seminole County, Ga., voted more than 35-1 in favor of the plan. The complete vote was 632 for and 17 against the plan. In November's Presidential election Roosevelt received 661 votes and Landon 120 votes in Seminole County. Randolph and Mitchell counties voted 10-1 and 7-1 in favor of the plan. Surely the will of the majority must rule in a democracy of the Constitution by the Supreme Court.

Under questioning by Senator Neely, Mr. Moley added to his prepared statement, in part as follows: "I think the original intention was, the Supreme Court should be one policy making agency of the Government." The question may be asked where is such an admission found in the text of the Constitution and why should any living person's thoughts be accepted on what intentions men had a hundred and more years ago and with the constant changes undergoing in the life of the Nation.

'Perilous Days Ahead.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If we were living in an age of reason, instead of force, your very thoughtful and forceful editorials on the President's proposal to scrap the Supreme Court might carry enough weight to save the few remaining vestiges of our great Constitution and what was America! But it is too late.

What sense is there in talking about saving the Constitution when it has already been violated in countless ways by the very men who are sworn to "preserve, protect and defend it?" Of what avail are our courts when their writs are no longer respected by the Governor of a State?

Perilous days are ahead! What was once and not so long ago the great structure of our Government, the best and the freest on earth, is beginning to crumble. The law of the jungle has taken the place of the law of reason and right, because we have permitted a group of ignorant demagogues and mountebanks to seize the reins of government and, in order to keep the spoils, they are playing into the dirty hands of a few so-called labor leaders who are mad with the lust for power.

The few remaining Americans are members of a fast vanishing race! This—what was once our country—is now to become the battleground of the struggle between certain foreign elements which we have apathetically allowed to seize our land for the furtherance of their mongrel European notions, such as fascism, naziism and communism—but mongrels all!

'Vituperation, Vehemence.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a dispenser of verbal vinegar and vitriol, Senator Glass has few if any peers. His sincerity and ability are unquestioned. But no matter how sincere and able a public man is, vituperation and vehemence in a speech do not make up for facts.

When the eminent solon spoke over the radio of jurists "whose spirit of independence keeps pace with their profound knowledge of law," he must have elicited a snicker from several million listeners. Patrick Henry declared, "We have but one lamp by which our feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience." Using that lamp in the present situation, it would seem as clear as daylight that the "profound knowledge of the law" of the Supreme Court is a curious kind of knowledge which frequently causes members of the tribunal to split almost evenly as to what the law is and is not, and which leaves them as much in disagreement on many points as average citizens. If Supreme Court justices differ so often as to the genuine meaning of the Constitution, where is their supposed sanctity and infallibility? But it is not only a matter of disagreeing among themselves to the tune of 5 to 4, 6 to 3, etc., for, aside from these repeated differences, every now and then we have the spectacle of the court of a given period reversing the decisions of the court of several years previous.

Haven't we a right to come to the conclusion that the court's opinion as to what is and what isn't constitutional is not necessarily any nearer correctness than the opinions of the rank and file of our citizens who elect our officials, do the work and create the wealth of the Nation?

'Clarifying Amendment.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is interesting to note that former brain truster, Raymond Moley, in testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee referred to the fact that two years ago he urged the Administration to sponsor a constitutional amendment, along the lines pledged in the Democratic platform, and that his suggestion was rejected. If a "clarifying amendment" had been pushed at that time, it is very probable that Congress would this moment have all necessary power to pass social legislation, assuming a reasonable amendment meeting public support had been presented for ratification.

The amendment method may seem too slow to the backers of the evasive and uncertain court packing scheme, but isn't it wise to move a little slowly when making a drastic change in the basic structure of our Government? And it would be remembered that the amendment repealing prohibition was ratified within less than one year by the use of State conventions rather than through the State legislatures.

'Let's Go Forward.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is not likely that the President expects any of his plans, if and when adopted, to create a Utopia in the United States and no one should expect such a state to result therefrom, but there are conditions existing in our country which he has pointed out and some conditions which may not have been mentioned specifically, which if allowed to continue from year to year may cause a situation far more serious than any with which we have had to contend in the past. Therefore, it would seem most urgent that a President who has the interest of the whole country at heart and has the courage in the face of strong opposition to recommend action for the remedying of deplorable conditions, should receive the wholehearted support of a grateful people.

Let's go forward, America, behind a courageous leader—though he may err at times, so may we—in a united effort to secure for all of the people of our country a fair share of those things necessary for that happy, healthy and prosperous life to which the American people are entitled.

'The Sectional Threat.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since the announcement of the President's scheme for packing the Supreme Court, several speakers have called attention to the danger to minority religious groups, in times of widespread hysteria and prejudice, involved in any weakening of our governmental system of checks and balances. As examples, they have cited the Oregon statute outlawing private schools and the Nebraska statute barring the teaching of German in a parochial school. Fortunately, both of these unwise laws were struck down as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Little notice, however, has been taken of the sectional threat involved in the packing plan. It is strange to see Southern Senators, blinded by party loyalty, supporting the President's proposal. Do they not realize that an independent Supreme Court is essential to their section? Once the character of the court has been altered and a political element injected, the old controversial questions affecting the peculiar local problems of the South, now satisfactorily settled, may be reopened—with disastrous results—should prior decisions be reversed.

Southerners will do well to recall that the Supreme Court was their only haven of refuge during the dark days of the reconstruction period. Even in that era of post-war bitterness, an independent court had the hardihood to declare that although our Nation is an "indestructible union," it is composed of "indestructible States."

'Crime Against Youth.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Constitution gives you all the liberty we enjoy. Destroy it, as President Roosevelt is attempting to do, and freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom to assemble, freedom to worship God according to the dictates of conscience—in fact all the liberties which make possible the expansion and development of the human spirit—will be swept away and we and our children will become the slaves of despots as in Russia today.

The Constitution is all that stands between the liberty-loving American people and a supreme dictatorship today.

To "pack" the Supreme Court for the purpose President Roosevelt desires, constitutes an insult to our noble forefathers, a crime against youth today—a tragedy to unborn generations of Americans.

'English History.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While the controversy over the Supreme Court still rages and remains unsettled, a chapter from English history may not be amiss.

Charles I had become king and was bent on having a war with Spain. The plan was not agreeable to Parliament or the people. Parliament refused to vote the necessary supplies, so Charles dissolved it forthwith and proceeded to raise money in his own way. Let Dickens in his popular little history of England, taking his facts mainly from Hume, tell the rest of the story:

He (the king) levied certain duties called tonnage and poundage, which had not been granted by Parliament, and could lawfully be levied by no other power; he called upon the seaport towns to furnish and to pay all the cost for three months of a fleet of armed ships, and he required the people to unite in lending him large sums of money, the repayment of which was very doubtful. If the poor people refused they were pressed as soldiers or sailors; if the gentry refused, they were sent to prison.

Five gentlemen, named Sir Thomas Darnel, John Corbet, Walter Earl, John Heveningham and Everard Hampden, for refusing were taken up by a warrant of the king's privy council and were sent to prison without any cause but the king's pleasure being stated for their imprisonment. Then the question came to be solemnly tried, whether this was not a violation of Magna Charta and an encroachment by the king on the highest rights of the English people. His lawyers contended no, because to encroach upon the rights of the English people would be to do wrong, and the king could do no wrong. The accommodating judges decided in favor of this wicked nonsense and here was a fatal division between the king and the people.

I wonder if the American people want that kind of a court?

'Motley Mandate.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Intellectuals with one accord all accept the United States Constitution as a document of profound wisdom without equal or unsurpassed in the annals of history.

For the sake of argument, admit that the President has the right to appoint from 1 to 100 members to the Supreme Court. The reasons for the increase or decrease should have been clearly and honestly stated in his pre-election declarations. On the contrary, when the fact was visioned and expressed, the President was as silent as death and his mouthpieces with loud acclaim bitterly assailed those who foresaw his intentions, denouncing such forecasts as ridiculous and untrue propaganda. Now hear from the housetops talk of the motley mandate that the Chief executive says came from the people. Such juggling, somersaulting, acrobatic exhibitions has no political parallel, and would double discount all circus exhibitions.

Issue Called Choice Between Law By Justices Or Officials

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is apparent from the testimony of those who have appeared before the judiciary committee of the Senate, as well as from the trend of cross-examination, that so many issues are being raised about the President's proposed reform of the Supreme Court that we are apt to lose sight of the real purpose of the reform.

The real issue is not that the present justices are biased; that because of age and political outlook their opinions are not abreast of the time; that they are imposing their outworn economic theories upon an Administration seeking to make democracy work; or that additions to the court would infuse new blood into the court by bringing to its work a fresher and more sympathetic view of modern conditions. None of these things constitute the real purpose of the proposed reform.

If the President's words mean anything, the reform means that when carried through, the Supreme Court would no longer assert the power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. On the contrary, the duty of the court would be to find within the Constitution, under the general welfare, commerce clause or other provisions, sanctions for each and every act passed by Congress. In other words, the court's function would cease to be that of interpretation, and would become one of ratification only. It is this purpose, avowed by the President, which renders it so unpalatable to lawyers generally.

Heretofore all of our Presidents and elected representatives have considered their election as a mandate from the people to provide for their welfare under the terms of the Constitution and in accordance with our form of government. After 150 years of successful operation, this scheme of things is deemed obsolete and in fact erroneous from its inception.

Freed from the alleged biased views of the Supreme Court, will Congress and the President be guided by the spirit of the Constitution? Will a major party in power permit the Congress, under the direction of the Executive, to enact only laws which are within the spirit of the Constitution? The answer to these questions may be had from the nature of the laws already passed by Congress.

Congress has passed, and the President has approved, laws extending the jurisdiction and power of the Federal Government to business, manufacturing, mining, agriculture, labor, saving for old age, hours and condition of employment and wages to be paid. Can anyone say that these powers, exercised by the Federal Government, invade the powers reserved to the States and to the people? If they have, what was and is the duty of the Supreme Court? Ratify these acts and give them judicial sanction? That is what the proposed reform seeks to accomplish. If accomplished, how will it work?

The executive department of our Government is at present possessed of tremendous popularity and power. Our National Legislature has been compared to a rubber stamp. The voice of State assemblies does not rise above a whisper. This situation may or may not continue. Let us suppose, however, that the pendulum swings in the other direction. Will Congress be able to maintain all of the powers it has taken over from the States; or will the States attempt to assert powers and jurisdiction over agriculture, mining, business, manufacturing, hours of labor and local moral problems? If the national and State laws conflict, as they evidently must, by whom shall such issues be decided? By a Supreme Court with the power of ratifying acts of Congress only? If so, and there seems to be no other escape, will the States acquiesce, or will the States, in their turn, demand that the court be packed or repacked?

The issue presented by the reform proposal, is whether we can trust an independent court, with five to four decisions, to say what the Constitution is, or whether we should trust the good judgment of the other departments of the Government to say what the Constitution is.

'When The Courts Got In Huey's Way.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Shortly after the recent election a rather prominent Louisiana Democrat who predicted the landslide for Roosevelt, in reply to my inquiry, stated that the President and the Democrtic committee had virtually adopted the methods of the late Huey Long with some refinements; that, regardless of what the facts were, the great majority comprising the "have nots" would be for the man who promised them the most, and that it was his opinion that had the late Mr. Long been the candidate with the same number of jobs at his disposal, same billions of public funds to spend, etc., he (Long) would have polled 10 per cent more votes than Roosevelt did.

In support of his argument he pointed out that on the average Louisiana was probably not much different than the other States of the Union, and that Huey had built up a machine there that had proved invincible. Despite all the combinations of "good citizens," etc., against him, his reign had never even been threatened, he said.

When I said that the rest of the country still had the Supreme Court, the gentleman in question laughed and said: "Don't be too sure. When the courts got in Huey's way, Huey contrived to get control of the courts, and Roosevelt will probably do likewise."

At the time I couldn't place much faith in my friend's argument and couldn't see much logic in his reasoning. In view of recent events, however, I have been thinking it over and have come to the conclusion that there was a good deal more in what he said than I thought there was at the time.

'Certain Historical Incident Of Value.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the current popular interest in the issue of popular versus judicial interpretation of the Constitution, a certain historical incident that comes to mind may be of some value in throwing light on the potentialities for good and evil contained in the President's plan for reorganization of the Supreme Court.

It is related that early in the First Century, B. C., a certain itinerant preacher, called Jesus of Nazareth, was seized by the multitude and delivered to the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate, for judgment. Pilate, acting in his judicial capacity, after due examination according to the forms of the law, said to the people, "Behold, I have examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him: No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him: and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him. I will therefore chastise him, and release him."

But the multitude, blinded by its passion and impatient of the restraint of the law created for the protection of the rights of the individual, "cried out all at once, saying 'Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas.'"

"Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them. But they cried, saying, 'Crucify him, crucify him.'"

So Pilate weakly abdicated his judicial powers and accepted the verdict of the majority in mob assembled. And Jesus was crucified.

This incident may, I hope, serve to illustrate some of the dangers in altering the composition of a court to make it conform more closely to the temporary popular will, under the plea that its verdicts do not coincide with the fickle will of the majority.

Civil Service Arguments.

CHRISTINE R. KEFAUVER, of the Civil Service Sentinel, of New York, complains of misrepresentation in the discussion of the exemption from Federal income tax enjoyed by State, county and municipal employes throughout the country. The proposition is simply that such employes should pay the same rate on their income that is paid by people in private industry on like amounts. There is no misrepresentation in that.

As her first point Miss Kefauver holds that there should be a distinction between political appointees, who draw the highest pay, and civil service employes, who do the real work. The answer is that all public employes should pay the tax pertaining to their brackets. The political appointees who draw the highest pay and do not work should be eliminated. This may sound naive, but let us be naive about it.

Points two and three note that civil service people pay the State income tax and the sales tax, the same as others. What of it? Do they want medals for that?

• • • •

Point four says, "We struggle with the increased cost of living on a rigidly fixed salary." But everybody struggles with the cost of living, and the same rigidity of salary, plus the job protection of civil service, would be a boon to people in other lines when wages are down and unemployment is rife.

Point five—"We are compelled to reside within the City of New York whether we can afford the rent or not." It is just too tragic that people working for the city have to live in the city.

Point six—"We receive no bonuses." That is a terrible oversight. There should be bonuses at once. But, by the way, who does get bonuses?

Point seven—"We cannot strike or enforce our demands." Neither can about 85 per cent of private employes.

Point eight—"We contribute half the pension we ultimately receive." So do we all under social security, and people who buy private insurance against old age contribute the whole pension in payments over the years.

• • • •

Point nine—"We carry our lives in our hands every moment of our working day if we are policemen, firemen, sanitation men, nurses, doctors or inspectors, and we are not covered by workmen's compensation." Miss Kefauver is being dramatic. Some policemen and firemen are killed, but such tragedies are provided for. The slaughter of sanitation men, nurses, doctors and inspectors should be looked into. Few have heard about it. And the lack of workmen's compensation as such is amply compensated by other protection.

Point ten—"We are called upon to contribute to unemployment and relief agencies and have contributed millions." When were private employes and businessmen forbidden to contribute to these agencies?

Point eleven—"When times are good it takes all our pay to meet expenses. We do not share in the general prosperity. When times are bad our wages are the first cut." The answer again is that people on the same pay have to pay the income tax if their earnings are within the taxable brackets. And when times are bad the wages of public servants are not the first but the last to be cut.

Point twelve—"We pay every tax which you pay except the Federal income tax, and very few civil service employes receive a salary high enough to be taxable, anyway." They should pay every tax that other citizens pay, with no exceptions, and if their salaries are below the tax line they needn't worry.

I trust this is free of misrepresentation.

'Good Earth' Given Notable Premiere Here

Impresses Capacity House as Profoundly Moving Drama of Life.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE GOOD EARTH." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the novel by Pearl S. Buck, adapted to the screen by Talbot Jennings, Tess Slesinger and Claudine West, with musical score by Herbert Stothart, costarring Paul Muni and Luise Rainer, with Walter Connolly, Charles Grapewin, Tilly Losch, Jessie Ralph, Soo Yong, Keye Luke, Roland Lui, Suzanna Kim, Chingwah Lee, Harold Huber, Olaf Hytten, William Law and Mary Wong. Directed by Sidney Franklin. At the National Theater. Previewed Wednesday night, March 24.

From the many pages of Pearl S. Buck's monumental novel of "The Good Earth," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has plucked a screen drama of great visual beauty, superb characterization and tremendous emotional power.

The narrative which, in its original form, traced the whole story of human existence, has been adapted to the screen with sympathetic understanding, unerring fidelity to the book and fine intelligence. Condensation of the comprehensive Buck best-seller and the deletion of certain expository passages have, necessarily, been made to bring the picture within reasonable footage and running time, but the spirit of the novel and its expansive recital of the vicissitudes through which the farmer, Wang Lung, and his faithful and patient, slave-girl wife, O-Lan, passed in their rise from peasantry to riches, lordship and the rearing of a family of sons have been adhered to with rigid and convincing fidelity.

Done on Mammoth Scale.

"The Good Earth" has been executed upon a grandiose scale. It is mammoth in scene and overpowering in its photographic effects, as befits a drama of such profound integrity and impressiveness. It deals with the fundamentals of life in terms of action that may be understood easily by all classes of spectators. It is simple, direct and commanding in the poignancy of its sincere and honest reflection of life—sound, believable and somber, perhaps, but universal in the appeal of its realistic depiction of the ages-old problems of mankind. Here, it may honestly be said, is a film play that sets forth the universal drama of man at its zenith.

The pictured tale has its inception, as in the book, with the events of the joyous morning of the day upon which Wang Lung, the poor farmer, is to go to the Big House and take himself a wife from among the slaves of Cuckoo. O-Lan, his bride, is a wordless woman, inured to all of the hardships of ceaseless toil. Together they set about the task of improving their meager lands and adding to them as they are able. Wang wants, above all else, a family of sons to lend strength and dignity to the house of Lung. O-Lan bears him these sons and they prosper. More land is added to their productive fields and a competence begins to build itself.

Then come the misfortunes that plague their lives for many years—famine, drought, pestilence—and they journey to the south where it is said there is an abundance of living for all. Here revolution strikes and only by a miracle do Wang and his family escape execution for the looting of a palace. In the thundering turmoil of this social upheaval, O-Lan comes into possession of a bag of priceless jewels, which enables them to return to their homeland, where the rains have started again, and add still further to their holdings of the good earth.

As Befits Rank and Station.

So prosperous do they become that Wang Lung buys the Big House, from which he took his wife as slave, and assumes the rank of lord, able to buy and sell with the most affluent of the wealthy dealers in the commodities of the soil. With this rise in fortune comes also the torture of O-Lan. Wang takes unto himself a second wife to share their home, Lotus, the sing-song dancer. Thence forward, O-Lan becomes the picture's symbol of tragic disillusionment until, scourged by a plague of locusts and able to save his lands only by the valiant aid of his entire family, Wang finally comprehends the bitter consequences of his unfaithfulness and casts Lotus out of his house when he discovers her in a sinister liaison with his youngest son. O-Lan dies with words of forgiveness and wifely contrition on her lips.

The story of "The Good Earth," as may be surmised from this sketchy and wholly inadequate summary, is not a gay or enlivening one, but it is so true, so forceful in its penetrating insight into human nature and relationships and so magnificently done as to leave an indelible impression upon any thoughtful mind as one of the cinema's most notable achievements to date.

The roles of Wang Lung and O-Lan are played by Paul Muni and Luise Rainer, winners of the Academy awards for the best screen acting of 1936. Mr. Muni's is by far the more expansive role of the two, but Miss Rainer, with only a few lines to speak, succeeds in etching a character of such infinite pathos and complete devotion in the face of many obstacles that her impersonation must take rank with one of the masterpieces of mimetic portrayal that the motion pictures have had to offer.

Many in Cast Excel.

The supporting cast is made up of players who lend themselves with peculiar facility to the spirit and the movement of the drama. Walter Connolly, as the lazy, ineffectual uncle, and Charles Grapewin, as the Old Man, Wang's senile father, contribute character studies that add immeasurably to their statures as actors of the first rank. In lesser parts, Jessie Ralph, as Cuckoo; Tilly Losch, as Lotus; Soo Yong, as the elder son, and Roland Lui, as the younger, aid greatly in pointing the dramatic episodes in which the play abounds and in making it a work of exceptional balance and work. No less may be said of the players cast in the "bit" roles, among whom may be named Harold Huber, Chingwah Lee, Olaf Hytten and Mary Wong.

The quality of photography revealed in this picture is extraordinary. Particularly are the revolutionary amazing fashion to be commended. tionary scenes and those that visualize the locust plague in most They are marvels of mechanical perfection that will baffle any lay mind as to the manner of their accomplishment.

Film Production of Complete Grand Opera Is Seen By Will H. Hays in His Annual Report to Industry

Acquisition of 'Universal Audience' by Improved Quality of Screen Plays Held to Pave Way for Operatic Works of First Caliber; Miss Cornell to Play 'Candida' Two Weeks in New York; American Theater Society Opens Subscription Books; Notes.

IT seems to me that one of the most salient points made by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in his annual report to the motion picture industry—released on Saturday, when, unfortunately, or maybe fortunately, we have no column of general comment—is contained in the opening paragraphs of the abstract of the report distributed to the drama desks.

BELL.

With his customary perspicuity, Mr. Hays observes that "the proverbial 'movie public' has disappeared and a universal theater public has emerged, now that motion picture entertainment embraces the greatest works of literature, drama and music . . . The past year has proved that better pictures are erasing the distinction between any specialized audience and the number of possible patrons which fine entertainment can command. Films based on the great works of drama and literature no longer are made in the resigned expectation that they must fail at the boxoffice."

This is a stand that this department has consistently maintained, although more often in private conversations than in print. I am unable, these last few months, to perceive any difference between the audiences that attend the best offerings of the living theater and those that lend their support to the worthier exhibits of the cinema. I see the same distinguished members of Washington's official, diplomatic, social and business life at both.

This is as it should be. As Mr. Hays further points out, there is no line of demarcation left between the productions of the so-called "legitimate" theater and the transcription to celluloid of the foremost works of the greatest dramatists and composers. More often than not, the screen is able to give the classic work a more complete and a more expository interpretation than is possible on the narrow confines of the traditional stage.

"Romeo and Juliet," for example, was accorded a vastly more understandable and realistic exposition on the screen than it ever could have been accorded on the stage. The action of the classic Shakespeare tragedy ranged through a whole town before the eyes of the audience, instead of doing so merely by implication.

The same has been true in the cases of a vast number of other screen productions of plays and operettas that never were done full justice on the boards of the theater of flesh and blood.

Mr. Hays, furthermore, foresees another development upon which this column has dwelt briefly and sporadically since sound has come to its present state of perfection on the screen. That is the production of complete grand operas before the cameras and microphones. With such recording as is manifest in the current picturization of "Maytime," at Loew's Palace, there seems to be no further reason for producers to hold back on the pretext that the sound tracks cannot do justice to the scores of the world's greatest musical works.

There is a fine avenue here for the approach of some daring producing company to the task of presenting the first cinematographic grand opera. The two works that always spring to mind as offering the most fertile field for both pictorial and auricular effects are "Aida" and "Madame Butterfly."

What stupendous productions they would make for the screen! Let us hope that Mr. Hays' prophesy that some such thing soon will be undertaken will not prove a mere shot in the dark.

Word comes from the unfailing Ray Henderson, in charge of the Katharine Cornell-Guthrie McClintic news bureau, that while Miss Cornell's original intention was to act George Bernard Shaw's "Candida" at only four performances each week during the final month of her New York engagement in Maxwell Anderson's "The Wingless Victory," in order to relieve the strain produced by the exhausting role of Oparre in the Anderson tragedy, such has been the success of the Shavian revival that, in order to meet the demand for tickets, she has arranged a supplementary season of two weeks during which "Candida" only will be acted in the Empire Theater. She then will make a brief road tour, including Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago, in which cities she will present both plays.

The American Theater Society of Washington, which recently closed its subscription season of Society and Theater Guild plays at the National Theater with the presentation of Katharine Hepburn in "Jane Eyre," announces that its books now are open for the renewal of standing subscriptions and the enrollment of new.

Bess Davis Schreiner, in charge of the local office of the American Society, just back from a conference with the Theater Guild heads in New York, makes known that during the past year, according to reports of all regional supervisors, an increase of 40 per cent over the previous year's subscriptions was recorded in the cities where the subscription policy is in operation.

There are at present 5,200 subscribers to the six plays offered each season in the National Capital. It is Miss Schreiner's lofty, and by no means impossible, aim to double this number during the ensuing year. Her offices are in the National Theater, second floor front.

Jane Froman, billed as "radio's loveliest lark," will headline the vaudeville bill at the Earl Theater for the week of Friday, April 13, according to announcement made over the week-end by John J. Payette, local zone manager of the Warner interests. Miss Froman, who has been featured in the Ziegfeld "Follies," originally studied for grand opera. At the Earle she will present special arrangements of some of her favorite songs—and the public's, too, incidentally—and those for which radio listener-inners have made the greatest number of requests.

I find this brief, but self-explanatory not on the desk:

"In that inevitable pre-deadline rush of last Wednesday night, my review of 'Girls in Uniform,' being presented by the Washington Civic Theater at Wardman Park, erroneously credited Irene Schmidt with playing the role of Fraulein von Bernburg. Without casting any reflections upon Miss Schmidt for her interpretation of Fraulein von Gaerschner, a relatively minor character, it is actually Amy Veerhoff who should have received the credit for so completely limning the character of Fraulein von Bernburg. I greatly regret this slip and trust that you and Miss Veerhoff both will condone the inadvertent mixup in names.

W. A. WHITNEY."

Having occassionaly been guilty of the same transgresion myself, I only can hope that Miss Veerhoff will accept this candid explanation.

Guilty Conscience Note.

"The Good Earth" reminds me that the time has arrived to get out the shovel and rake and go to work in that back yard, which, at this season of the year, seems no larger than Rock Creek Park!

"THE INFORMER." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by Liam O'Flaherty, with screen play by Dudley Nichols, starring Victor McLaglen, supported by Heather Angel, Preston Foster, Margot Grahame, Wallace Ford, Una O'Connor, J. M. Kerrigan, Joseph Sauers, Neil Fitzgerald, Donald Meek, D'Arcy Corrigan, Leo McCabe, Gaylord Pendleton, Francis Ford, May Boley and Grizelda Harvey. Directed by John Ford. Reviewed (revival) by T. Johnson Williams.

During all the years that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has been making annual awards to the "bests" in sundry rubrics, there probably has been no picture so completely "made" thereby as was the RKO-Radio production of "The Informer." Though acclaimed by the critical fraternity throughout the land, this picture was most frigidly received until the Academy accorded its statuettes to Victor McLaglen, Dudley Nichols and others connected with the Liam O'Flaherty picturization.

As the awards made "The Informer," so "The Informer" made the Little Theater, and yesterday, as the umsteenth revival got under way, it seemed a reunion, of sorts. It should be on very one's "must" list for repeated viewings.

On the supplementary program are "St. Helena and Its Man of Destiny," "Sunkist Stars at Palm Springs" and an issue of Pathe Topics.

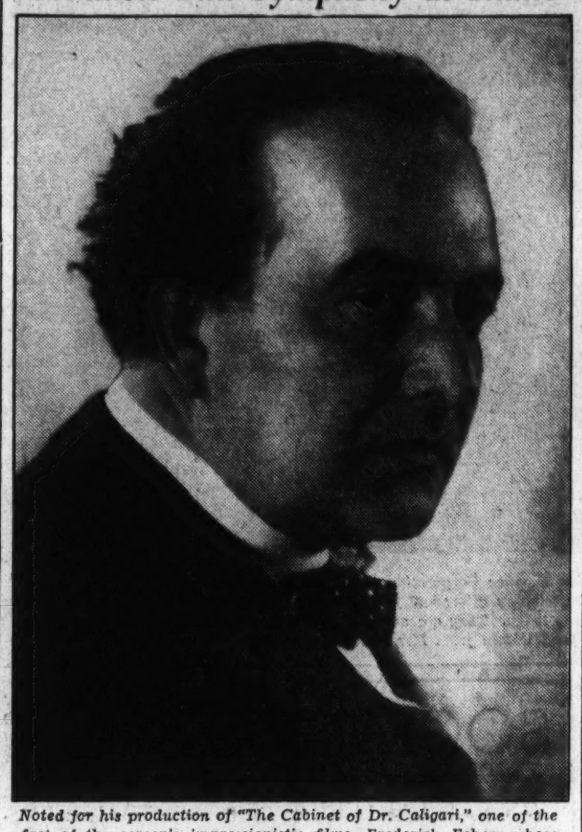
Conducts Full Symphony at Rialto



Noted for his production of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," one of the first of the screen's impressionistic films, Frederick Feher, whose likeness appears above, now makes an additional bid for fame with "The Robber Symphony," currently on view at the Rialto Theater. Herr Feher wrote the script, composed the score, directed the picture and conducts the symphony orchestra that will be heard on Ninth street under his baton through today. His son stars in the film, with his shaggy, black dog, Satan.

You have heard, no doubt, that there are actors who save money. Oh, I will admit without argument that they are few, nevertheless they do exist. John Boles, for instance; and Harold Lloyd. But for a real saver-upper, I nominate Fred MacMurray. Fred runs his new life on the basis that what was good enough yesterday is still good enough. He has changed his standards very little since wealth flowed his way.

He has a business manager who invests and guards his money, and each week this chap doles out $25 to Fred for pocket money. When time came for MacMurray to take a little vacation not long back, the manager telephoned Mrs. "Mac." to find out how much extra money they wanted. She astonished him by saying they would not need any. Fred, who had been looking forward to the vacation, had prepared for it by saving 14 of his $25 checks!

I never sat down and got up more quickly than yesterday noon. It happened when I ran across Sally Eilers lunching alone in the Universal Studio cafe. "Lonesome?" I asked. "I certainly am," she replied. "I might as well be marooned on a desert island. But I must, warn you," she added as I plumped into the chair opposite her, "that I'm working with a bad case of influenza." That was when I popped up again.

Some common sense in Jack Oakie's retort to Cary Grant, who growled that Jack should go on a diet. "You're getting so fat you're losing your poise," Grant explained. Jack grinned and returned: "Maybe, but I'm not losing any meals. I've been on a diet and I didn't like it. I nearly starved to death for ten years as a slender, juvenile tenor. I'm doing all right as a fat comedian, so let me alone."

"BEEF TRUST." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts starring Billy Watson, supported by Billy Spencer, Charlie Cane, Claude Mathias, Billy Pinan, Sammy Smith, Stanley Simmons, Will Lacey, Yeso & Doro, Nadine Marsh, Marie Oliver, Pearl Mylie, the Beef Trust chorus and the Dancing Ensemble. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney, BCAA.

This current burlesque show defies comparison with any to come through in the last four years and it superlative merits in every department militate against anything suggestive of "criticism." However, blanket approval may be given, with the suggestion that, if this production be missed, the greatest conglomeration of the old and the new, replete with songs, dances and the other specialties of modern burlesque, will not be numbered among your entertainment thrills.

Tops on the program is, of course, William B. Watson—the very Billy whose Beef Trust Chorus was all the rage in dad's day. "Krausmeyer Alley" is back again—for the most part played as he has done it for some five decades. His Gaelic neighbor is Billy Spencer, as Grogan, with buxom Pearl Mylie, as Katie Krausmeyer, and Charlie Cane as the cop. For more than a half-hour the side-splitting sketch goes on, interlarded with exhibitions by the Beef Trusters, a double quartette of lassies whose gross tonnage is approximately one!

One might rave on and on about Mr. Watson who, in his seventy-second year, returns to the boards to score one of the greatest personal triumphs ever achieved in the Gayety Theater. Indeed, Act 2 alone of the opera might easily have been the entire show.

Two Shows in One.

In Act 1 there is condensed an entire burlesque performance, making the week's production actually two shows in one—and what shows! Claude Mathias and Sammy Smith uphold the comedy honors (those not pilfered by Mr. Watson), with Cane and Billy Pinan (who also does a shoft-shoe dance) as the straight men. Stanley Simmons is the tenor.

Miss Mylie is the lead-off woman for the revelatory aspects of the bill and while she sets a high standard for Nadine Marsh, she nevertheless does her swellest work with Mr. Watson. And Miss Marsh is no tyro at tantalizing traipsing.

Seldom has the gayety presented a program so glitteringly studded with what on any other stage would be straight vaudeville acts. First of all: there is the ballroom dance team of Yevo and Doro, whose work is swingingly fast and done with the finesse of accomplished artists. Then there are Atta and Blake, a couple of Washington boys who are as good as any fast tap-dance team on the wheel. Marie Oliver turns out several accordion numbers.

The novelty of the week is offered by Will Lacey, who does more things on a unicycle than most of us could do on two feet.

Here is as near the perfect show as it may reasonably be expected to have: A little bit of everything for everybody's entertainment.

Fanciful Film Holds Screen At the Rialto

'Robber Symphony' Proves Grotesque Conception With Fine Music.

"THE ROBBER SYMPHONY." Concordia Films picturization of a story by Anton Kuh and Jack Trendell, adapted to the screen, composed and directed by Frederick Feher, featuring Hans Feher, George Graves, Magda Sonja, Alexander Rignaulty, M. Martin-Harvey, Tela-Tchai, W. Booth, Al Marshall, Jack Tracy, Oscar Asche, Ivor Wilmot, Vinette, Jim Gerald and Georges Andre Martin. Presented with Symphony orchestra of 70 pieces. Reviewed at the Rialto Theater Sunday night.

In this subject, Frederick Feher, author-composer-director-producer, has evolved a grotesque bit of imagery that pursues the same sort of imaginative freedom from accepted film forms as characterized "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," for which he also was responsible.

The story is a whimsical and fairyesque sort of thing that follows uncharted channels of narration and ends almost on the note of a Hans Anderson bit of fable. There is a recurrent background of music that tells as much of the psuedo-dramatic content of the play as the sparse dialogue and the occasionally spirited action. There is, it must be confessed, a sort of unity of absurdity about the whole bizarre business. The actual basis of the entire development is as flimsy as that of any fairy tale and never does the picture approach anything even remotely related to realistic human action.

"The Robber Symphony" has won high acclaim on the other side of the Atlantic as a film that strikes a new note in productional methods and values. Whether the distinctly European quality of the work will appeal to American audiences in comparable degree remains to be seen. It deals with the adventures of a small boy, his dog and his donkey, ensnared in the sinister machinations of a fantastic band of robbers—one with a straw hat in the high Alps, another a singing bandit, others instrumentalists who rely upon music as a part of the concealment of their predatory impulses.

Strange Stratagems.

A stockingful of money is stolen from an aged fortune-teller and dropped into the top of the lad's hurdy-gurdy as a safe place of hiding. He hies himself and his barrow-piano across the country-side and encounters extraordinary difficulties. In one village his rickety equipage is surrounded by many more precisely like it to make the robbers' plan of acquiring the money easier. Escaping this net, he finds himself in the deep snows of the mountains and the gendarmes enter the scene. They are nonplussed by the piping of tuneful melodies from snow drifts, apertures in the rocks, caverns and every other accessible point. In the meantime, Giannino's mother languishes in jail on suspicion. Violent snowstorms also play a part in hampering the cause of justice.

In the end, all comes well and the poor proprietors of the hurdy-gurdy in which the gold has been hidden all this time become rich in the true fairy-tale manner. During the progress of the narrative, such as it is, there are many entrancingly picturesque scenes of the Alpine beauties that are fabulous around the world. The settings and photography in the earlier sequences are in the early European custom of pea lighting and strange angles.

None of the cast is known to American audiences, with the possible exception of one or two who have appeared in British-made films. The role of the boy, Giannino, is played simply and without exaggeration by Hans Feher, son of the producer of the picture. He was present at the Rialto yesterday with his dog, Sultan, which plays so important a part in the action of the fantasy. The old witch is played effectively by Vinette, and George Graves is well cast as the grandfather. Magda Sonja is assigned to the role of the mother and causes a comparatively small part to take on amplified proportions. Ivor Wilmot is a forbidding magistrate, and Jim Gerald a charcoal-burner who might have been lifted from the cast of "The Chocolate Soldier," so grotesque is his makeup.

Symphony Orchestra Triumphs.

The most distinguished portion of the Rialto's bill will be found to be the rendition of Feher's "The Robber Symphony," conducted by the composer, and the encore number upon which a music-hungry audience insisted last night. Never before has the theater's orchestra pit been packed so full of instrumentalists. I should say that their total is nearer 50 than 70, but the richness, precision and finely graduated interpretation of their conductor's composition won the unstinted acclaim of those present. The instrumentation is complete and brings out the full worth of a work that is as variegated and whimsical as the picture for which it affords the atmospheric background.

Unfortunately, the orchestra will not be heard after today, complications having arisen that compel its abandonment.

FEATURE STORY: Jock Lawrence, publicity director for Sam Goldwyn, went to the hospital about ten days ago for a tonsilectomy . . . When he was coming out of the ether the first person he saw was Douglas Churchill . . . Churchill looked down at Lawrence and greeted: "It's a fine howdoyoudo in Hollywood—when they start cutting your throat on the inside!"

HELP WANTED: The New York Newspaper Women's Club, dedicated to the welfare of women in the newspaper business, was conducting its annual front-page ball at the Astor . . . In the notices to city editors, the newspaper women suggested the sending of reporters—male reporters—to cover this event!

BOOK DEPARTMENT: The Western Writers Congress, a leftist organization, has sent telegrams of protest to editors, condemning Eugene Lyon's "We Cover the World." . . . The book will be published in about four weeks and is the joint effort of 16 foreign correspondents. Lyons, who edited the book, for a number of years was the Moscow correspondent for the United Press. The protestors, who haven't seen this as yet unpublished volume, insist that Lyons holds anti-Soviet views . . . They'll be surprised when the volume appears on the stands. For Lyon's contribution isn't about Russia at all. His chapter is about Persia.

MOVIES: A few months ago Gene Fowler was assigned to write the script for the Irving Berlin picture "Alexander's Ragtime Band." As yet, however, the script is incomplete . . . When the producers kept insisting that he submit the completed scrip immediately, Fowler brought one of them to his home and led the way to his workroom . . . He pointed to a button, pressed it and said: "See? Here's why I haven't finished the script yet. This button just isn't working now." . . . "And what is this button?" the producer asked. "I thought you fellows knew all about this button," Fowler explained. "It turns on the Genius Juice!"

POLITICS: Meri and Miriam Niemi, accordionists, have been hired to entertain at Barney Gallant's . . . "Any letters of recommendation?" Gallant asked . . . The young ladies went to their home and returned with an official-looking Finnish document which they proceeded to translate. It attested to the fact that the writer knew their father in Finland, had gone on hunting trips with him and had enjoyed every moment of his company . . . The letter was signed "Kusti Kallio." . . . "In the first place," the puzzled Gallant asked, "how is this relevant, and in the second place who is this—this Kusti Kallio?" . . . The Niemi sisters bowed their heads reverently, "Kusti Kallio," they informed, "is the president of Finland."

THEATER DEPARTMENT: Charles Jordan, who is appearing in Warden Lawes' play, "Chalked Out," became ill before a performance this week, and the performance was canceled for that day. Exaggerated rumors regarding Jordan immediately sprouted and, as frequently occurs on Broadway, the final rumor had it that Jordan had died . . . Brock Pemberton, producer of "Chalked Out," was sitting in the Algonquin when a messenger brought him the phony report about Jordan . . . "It can't be true," Pemberton replied. "He's got to give me two weeks' notice."

NEWS SECTION: Dorothy Hall, the star now appearing in "Behind Red Lights," has been signed by Darryl Zanuck . . . Eddie Leonard, the veteran minstrel, opens at Bill's Gay Nineties tonight . . . For the first time since he knows her, John Barrymore will make a radio appearance without Elaine Barrie. He broadcasts Sunday evening on the Kraft program . . . A monocled visitor heil-Hitlered at El Morocco this morning and immediately was flattened by an Ex-Asst. Dist Atty. . . . The Vanity Fair Club, which once was rumored to have been promised backing by Eleanor Roosevelt, was closed down yesterday—even before it opened.

EMILY POST DEPARTMENT: When the Redwood homicide story broke in the newspapers, Prosecutor Breslin phoned Sam Rosoff's apartment in New York and discussed the case . . . "Yes, sweetheart," Rosoff kept answering, "that's right, sweetheart . . . yes, sweetheart." . . . "Listen, you," Breslin shouted over the phone, "don't call me sweetheart. I'm tough!"

DRAMA NOTES: Jim Timoney, husband of Mae West, who is in New York now producing a show with Mae West's backing, was closeted with Warren G. Pershing, son of Gen. Pershing, at the Cotton Club this morning . . . They discussed plans for young Pershing's going into the Timoney show.

By Lynda Reeve.

Today is the birthday anniversary of Mr. Jesse Jones, and yesterday afternoon he and Mrs. Jones celebrated it at a large reception in the Chinese room of the Mayflower Hotel. The exotic blue and gold room was banked with colorful spring flowers. From the far end of the grand ballroom came the strains of popular melodies. In the center of the ballroom was a huge buffet table decorated with three silver vases containing roses, snapdragons and other spring flowers, while Southern vines and rose-colored sweetpeas were arranged in patterns on the white damask covering.

Mrs. Jones, receiving with her husband and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, was wearing a frock of soft rose-beige crepe trimmed at the neck and on the short sleeves with a tracing in silk braid of the same shade. With this she wore a corsage of fresh violets tucked in her belt, and long gloves, bag and linen slippers of dark blue. Her wide-brimmed hat, also of dark blue, was trimmed with a cluster of pale pink flowers. About her shoulders was a long silver fox scarf. Mrs. Wilson was gowned in black lace with a picture hat of red straw.

The Garners Arrive.

Most of Washington was there, and appropriately enough, just as the orchestra struck up "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You" into the party strode Vice President John Nance Garner, accompanied by Mrs. Garner—two people who rarely go to parties, they would not miss celebrating the birthday of a fellow Texan. Mrs. Garner was costumed in black crepe printed with wide-spaced white floral clusters.

Among the Cabinet officials present were the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer Cummings, she in black with a spray of orchids; the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, she in a tailored Navy blue suit with swing cape lined with blue and white print and a high-crowned hat of blue felt; Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, she in wine ribbed crepe with a gold leaf clip at the V neck and a small hat of the same shade, and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, who was in dark blue, with a cluster of light blue flowers beneath the brim of her straw hat.

Diplomats Attend.

Quite a few of the diplomats were there, too, including the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora de Castillo Najera, she in a black and white print with black cloth coat and flat, shiny straw hat; the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Alexander Troyanovsky; the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Baron; the Ambassador of Germany, Herr Hans Luther, who came early and left soon for another party, and from his staff, Frau Scholz, the wife of the First Secretary of the embassy, attired in black, and the Second Secretary and Frau Struve; the Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrious Sicilianos; the Minister of Albania, Mr. Faik Konitza, and the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. MacWhite, who was wearing black trmimed with seal.

The Senators seemed to have a reception of their own just within the ballroom. One of the first to "receive" was Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, whose petite wife, in dark blue with a small hat worn at an angle, stood patiently by. Those who joined him were Senator Hamilton Lewis, Senator Wallace White, Senator John Townsend, Senator and Mrs. James J. Davis, she in pearl gray, and Mrs. Bennet Champ Clark, whose husband is now in Missouri, she attired in Navy blue, her stiff-brimmed sailor trimmed with a cluster of orange and yellow cherries.

Other Guests.

Others at the party included Judge and Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan, she in black with touches of yellow; Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Britten; Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, in all-black with a triple-strand pearl necklace; Mr. and Mrs. Marvin McIntyre, with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hays Warren 3d; Mrs. Harry Baxter, with Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross; Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis; Maj. and Mrs. Parker West, accompanied by Mrs. Emerson Howe; the Solicitor General and Mrs. Stanley Reed, she in black and white printed satin; the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Theodore O. Walters; Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, and Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin.

Also Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Gen. and Mrs. Peyton March, Mrs. Peter Drury, Mrs. Charles Hamlin, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Miller, with their sister, Miss Pauletta Guffey, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Morgan and Baroness von Below.

Underwood & Underwood.

The chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Mrs. Jesse Jones entertained at a large reception in the Mayflower Hotel yesterday afternoon from 5 until 7 o'clock in celebration of Mr. Jones' birthday anniversary, which is today. They are snapped as the host is receiving congratulations and good wishes from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

During the next few days, the cherry trees in Japan are at their best—which is usually the case in Washington. The holiday is celebrated with gay picnics and native dances—two of which will be given at the lawn party. Special musical arrangements for the dances have been made from Japanese folk tunes.

In order that the entertainment program be kept on an authentic Japanese basis, Dr. Shio Sakanishi, Department of Orientalia at the Library of Congress, has co-operated in instructing the Marian Chace dancers and in helping with the orchestrations of the Japanese folk tunes.

First Lady Has Box at College Play

Notable Audience Gathers for the 'Hasty Pudding' Show.

By Dudley Harmon.

Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the country's most celebrated Harvard graduate, occupied a box at the Belasco Theater last evening when the Hasty Pudding Club of that university put on its annual show before a hilarious audience. She arrived after a hurried trip from New York accompanied by several guests, including her son, John Roosevelt, with Miss Anne Clark, of Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Williams.

The First Lady, who wore a black satin afternoon frock with a diamond necklace, laughed as heartily as the rest of the audience at the antics of the Harvardites transported to England for the coronation ceremonies in their show, "Come Across." Mr. John Roosevelt arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon—too late for the luncheon for members of the cast at the White House, at which his father acted as host. The luncheon list was composed of 45 men—members of the cast—and two girls, make-up artists who are touring with the show.

Practically everybody in Washington with any connection at all with Harvard was in last night's audience. Representative and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, whose nephew, Gaspar Bacon, has a leading part, were early arrivals, Mrs. Bacon wearing a black velvet wrap over her fuchsia satin gown.

Black Favorite Color.

Black seemed to be the favorite color last evening. Among those who chose it were Mrs. William Jennings Price, Mrs. George Thorpe who was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Hoadley Powell, and Miss Lee Washington.

There were two magnificent silver fox capes in the audience last evening—one worn by Mrs. Edward Reed, who was accompanied by Miss Marian Trumbull and Mr. Reed, and the other by Miss Mary Louise Marsh, who was in a party which included Mr. Gardner Emmons, a Harvard graduate; Miss Cassie Johnson and Mr. Ronald Lyman, of Boston.

Others there were Mlle. Nora de With, daughter of The Netherlands Minister and Mme. van Haersma de With, a member of the younger committee working for the success of the show; Miss Stellita Stapleton, chairman of the committee, who wore a black velvet evening wrap with a white fur collar, and Miss Virginia Bacon, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Bacon, also a member of the committee.

Others in Audience.

Others were Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, who has a son at Harvard; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Warren; Mrs. Wallach Merriam, in green velvet trimmed with mink, with her son, Jack Merriam; Mr. Philip Brodmead, of the British Embassy; Mr. Henry LaFarge and Mr. John Pratt, Harvard graduates; Miss Laura Tuckerman, in a wine-red suit trimmed with gray fox fur; Mrs. Bowler Hull and Mrs. Edward Meigs, both in black; Mr. Hugh Auchincloss, Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell—Mr. Caswell went to Harvard; Mr. and Mrs. W. Royce Powell and Mr. Pendleton Turner.

Many of the younger people in the audience last evening had heard the hit tunes of the show played earlier in the afternoon by Meyer Davis at Mrs. Edward B. McLean's tea dance in honor of the cast. There were about 100 present, and a buffet supper was served before they left for the theater. The house was decorated with vases of spring flowers, anad many of the guests wandered about the lawns and gardens of Friendship enjoying the nice spring weather.

Last year there was a dance at the Sulgrave Club for members of the cast, but this time they left immediately after the show for Hot Springs, where they will perform tonight.

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

Mary Jane Stanley, daughter of the William Stanleys, certainly gave her former classmates at Wells College a rousing good time while they were in town. Saturday she took them all through the Department of Justice, and they did and saw everything except being fingerprinted. Mary Jane was in a sheer black frock with a high neck, finished with a quaint pointed turnover collar of white-lined organdy. Her blonde curls peeked out beneath a black poke bonnet, just her type of hat.

Her guests, cousins at that, were Jean Berry and Betty Forbes, who are so thrilled with Washington they could stay here indefinitely. Jean was in a trim suit of black, with which she wore a pale-lemon blouse, and Betty was in navy blue, wtih a small hat of gray felt, made on royal crown lines and trimmed uniquely with a dark-blue ribbon.

They were feted at a luncheon at the Mayflower Saturday and met such friends of Mary Jane as Betty Marsh, Randy Richardson, both of whom wore suits—Betty's of bright blue tweed, and Randy in black—Sylvine Clagett, wearing a printed crepe; Mildred Berry, who, with Jean, tried to find some "kinship," thinking that there is something in a name, especially when two people find they have the same one; Betty Forbes, another Wellsite, who hails from Baltimore, and who completed her smart printed ensemble with a wide-brimmed, shiny straw sailor—and, surprise of surprises, Louise Waller (Mrs. William Graves Grenshaw, to be quite correct and formal) had dropped down to the Capital just the evening before to see her parents, the Absolam Wallers, and was catching the evening train back to New York and Bill.

A pretty foursome having refreshments in the Mayflower lounge the other day included Meg McMullen, wearing a twin sweater set of mustard wool, with Oxford gray tweed skirt and top coat and small black felt hat; Libby Pierce in a suit of peacock color scheme, her skirt and bolero of royal blue crepe with lining and blouse of brilliant, green, and her fairly wide brimmed hat having just the slightest bit of green banding the crown; Kay Pearson in very New Yorkish black checked jacket with black skirt and accessories; and Maria Milne Whitehurst in black, her cloth coat, sans collar, and cut high at the neck, fastening with a single button, her hat intriguing as all of her chapeaux are, being a small creation of black shiny straw, flaring back off the face, with a hint of a veil and a white quill that was forever becoming entangled in the nearby overhanging greenery.

The girls were busily chatting about their plans for going down to Charleston, where Marie Milne will ably represent the District of Columbia at the festival and were no end thrilled over the prospects of balls at The Citadel, parades (which Meg admitted were her weakness—in spite of being a Washingtonian, most of them are too blase) tea dances and heaven knows what all.

All visits have to come to an end sometime—so it seems, and now Margaret Hume Entezan, who has been here with her mother, is about to pack up and leave—sailing on the 15th for Vienna to rejoin her husband.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: There is a friend of mine about whom I am much concerned. She is 45 years old but appears to be younger. Her general health is good; she is what might be called "well preserved." She has never been married but is very much interested in a man of about 35. This man, she tells me (for we are "bosom friends") makes ardent love to her, so much so that she is almost swept off her feet with emotion. After a passionate love scene, she feels that she would do anything, almost, to be able to be with him always.

Now, here is he problem; He has never actually asked her to marry him but has talked of marriage in a general way, and my friend feels that he would be willing to marry her; would, in fact, like to marry her if she were younger. She feels that he is afraid child bearing might be dangerous for her. My friend has confided in me that she would be willing to take the risk, since she feels she loves this man well enough to go through with the physical ordeal.

* * * *

Do you think it would be advisable for her to have a complete medical examination and if it proves favorable, show it to him? From the standpoint of a sympathetic onlooker I believe that is the only thing that keeps him from making her his wife. Please give your opinion.

INTERESTED FRIEND.

Playing the Fool.

DEAR INTERESTED FRIEND: My opinion is that your "bosom friend" would be making herself pitiably ridiculous in her suitor's eyes if she were to present him with a physician's statement to the effect that she is physically able to bear children. Any discussion of the possibility or desirability of children as a fruit of a hypothetical union can only be tolerably and reasonably entertained after a given couple are definitely engaged to be married. Then and then only is the lady justified in getting a scientific opinion to submit to her fiance..

* * * *

If this man's romantic ardor is as genuinely fervent as the woman's; if, in other words, his interest amounts to something more than physical infatuation, in all probability he will eventually propose marriage to her anyway, no matter what may be his misgivings concerning her potential adequacy for the role of mother. Since he hasn't proposed marriage she would be getting herself dangerously far out on a limb; placing herself in a position potentially awkward and humiliating to the nth degree in doing any such thing as you suggest. Suppose he didn't follow through with an immediate proposal? what then? With all due respect to both of them, there is always the possibility he is only trying to make a fool of her. It is for her to guard against acting the fool.

Any man who knows his way about sufficiently to make passionate love to an older woman, who does not hesitate to talk in vague general terms of marriage but balks at uttering an unmistakable proposal, had best be treated with a certain reserve and indifference. Such a man is not so tongue-tied or inhibited that he could not, if he wished, broach for honest discussion any intimate problem which might be perplexing him. In view of the overtures this man has made, to which he cannot help but realize this woman is emotionally responding, he owes her a candid explanation of his contradictory conduct. Until he makes it she should try to conceal her own feelings and expectations. M. H.

Wants 'Platonic Friend.'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a minor problem and would like to know just what to do. I have been married for three years and have a son aged nearly two. My husband's occupation is such that he can not be home of evenings. I love my husband very much but approve of platonic friendships. I would like to know if you know of any young men who also approve of platonic friendships.

* * * *

I think I am an agreeable person, rather attractive, not too plump, like all sports, dancing, etc. I could never care for another man as I do for my husband but I find my evenings rather lonesome. I do not like women's clubs and I do not like to drink excessively. If you could help me meet some one who believes as I believe, I would appreciate it. Very sincerely yours, LONELY.

Incredible Idea.

DEAR LONELY: Your naivete—or stupidity—has me completely flabbergasted. Do you suppose this husband you love so dearly, whom no other man could ever replace in your heart, would approve of your spending your evenings with another man, no matter how avowedly platonic your mutual interest in each other might be? And what about the little son? Who is to take care of him while you are out gallivanting around with the hypothetical platonic-minded man? Or do you propose to entertain said man at home? I don't think your home or your marriage would long survive such an incredible arrangement..

* * * *

This is a problem you had better take up with your husband before carrying it to anyone else, and I hope for both your sakes that he has a sense of humor. My advice to you is to try to find what mixed social life you can in your husband's company of afternoons and look to women friends for companionships in the evenings.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

French Courts Contribute New Hair Fashions

Parisian Stylist Declares That Romantic Modes Are Best for Today.

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

THE ELEGANCE of Louis XIV is returning to dramatize the fashion scene for 1937 according to Guillaume, famous Parisian hair stylist, who was in Washington recently. This genius of the coiffure, who long ago abandoned the artist's palette for the comb and brush, announces that the casual hair-dress and simple bob, are as dead as the dodo. "Romance and femininity have gone to the head and the spirit of the noted charmers of the courts of Louis XIV and Louis XV, are hovering about the distinctive coiffures of smart women of today," declared Guillaume with characteristic French enthusiasm and gesticulation.

Because Louis XIV's court has been acclaimed the most brilliant and because this authority believes that the times of both Louis XIV and Louis XV, should be remembered as the era when women dressed most beautifully, Guillaume has been making an intensive study of the styles of such famous women of history as: Mme. de Maintenon, Louise de la Valliere, Mme. de Pompadour and Mme. du Barry. "This reverting to the seventeenth and eighteenth century elegance, is a logical trend of the current times," exclaimed Guillaume, "lavish coiffures have always been associated with prosperity."

Face Determines Coiffure.

To view Guillaume creating a coiffure is a thrilling experience. He studies the contours of the face and head, and then expertly draws the hair back from the brow in loose waves and inverted curls; or perhaps, fashions a fluffy pompadour and finishes the creation with a loose roll in the back. "The long bob is not only more feminine," declared this master of the comb, "but you can do things with it; it is a better medium for designing a variety of coiffures than the shorter hair cut." Generally speaking, all of the Guillaume hair styles have an upward sweep and expose the ears; both ideas he claims are decidedly feminine.

This expert is adhering to two different methods in styling hair: one in which the hair is flat on top, curled at the sides, and long in the back, either arranged in a roll or series of curls. The other rule is to pile the hair high on top, with the sides quite high and a high hairline in the back. For the last method, both the Louis XIV and Louis XV inspirations are much in evidence. "Hair should be styled in harmony with body lines," claims Guillaume, "the coiffure and the costume forming a perfect frame for the figure."

In keeping with current trends, coiffures, avers Guillaume, should express vitality and verve—they should be alive. This is the reason given by him for not liking sculptured coiffures; they are dead-looking and lack sparkle, Guillaume contends. "Following the vogue for softness and femininity in the present style picture, coiffures should be soft and feminine—everything should correspond," exclaimed this authority, "that is why the modernized seventeenth and eighteenth century styles I have created are adaptable to 1937 fashions, as well as being romantic and different."

For Older Woman.

The older woman, maintains Guillaume, should never have her hair done in a wide-effect coiffure; her hair should be extremely neat and rather flat, with an upward rather than a downward sweep. The young girl, he believes, usually looks well with her hair soft and flying; she can get away with a coiffure that has a rather careless, disheveled appearance. "The coiffure is the guidepost to smart grooming," said this maestro. "Men notice a woman's hair and face first—before the costume. They like hair styles which are neat as well as smart, and that show the face to good advantage; a face that is not obviously made-up."

An interesting feature of the Guillaume hair styling is versatility; a coiffure which can be worn for either daytime or evening by the mere fluffing of the curls and waves. "For evening," he concluded, "I like to see well-chosen and appropriate ornaments in the hair, such as jeweled clips, flowers, feathers; the majority of evening coiffures need something of the sort to hold them together."

Clear, Fresh Appearance Is Aid to Beauty

By Carolyn Abbott.

"WHAT TYPE of face has the most universal appeal?" This question is one that comes frequently to beauticians. Is it a blonde, brunette, oval or round, dark or fair race? The answer is "a clean, pleasant, responsive face," a clear, fresh appearance that comes from habitual good grooming.

The look of cleanness and freshness is characteristic of the American ideal of beauty. All American women like it—they all strive for it. And it is something that they can all achieve. The woman who comes nearest to it realizes that she has only one face and that it must last her a lifetime. She treats it well and has, long ago, given up the hope of changing it by a cosmetic miracle. She has taken pains to learn exactly what kind of care will keep it at its most beautiful state.

There are women who work hard at treatments and spend a lot of money and yet never seem to attain this desirable freshness. Among them are the women who do not read the directions on labels, who toss away helpful circulars without a glance, who use the wrong preparations, or the right ones the wrong way. This careless method can't give satisfactory results.

Follow Directions.

The best way to accomplish what you want to with your face is to choose a small group of complexion aids which, prescribed by the best advice you can obtain, will keep your skin clear and velvety. Then study the leaflets and labels which the manufacturer has prepared especially to guide you in using them.

With a clean band or towel around your head to keep oil out of your hair, practice the light, upward strokes the experts use for applying creams. Use cleansing tissue generously, and don't forget that a smooth movement upward and outward is as helpful in taking off cream as in putting it on. Keep your freshening tonic in the icebox so that it will always have a delightful chilliness on your face.

Practice the stimulating massage movements by which you work tissue cream into your skin, until you can do them without thinking: Up from the base of the neck, up and out from the chin and from the mouth. Move across the lines around your mouth and on your forehead. Circle very gently around your eyes, beginning at the outer corner and over the lower lid.

Mask Treatment.

Even with the best daily care, your face at times will look tired and dull. This is the time for a mask treatment. There is one similar to transparent jelly that goes on easily, sets quickly, washes off with no trouble at all and only takes about one-half hour to make a face fresh as a spring morning. A cream mask surprises you by its cool and stimulating touch on your skin. It is simple to use; put it on, leave it a few minutes take it off with cotton wet with skin tonic, and emerge looking fresh and vibrant.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening

Elephants' Diet.

There is a favorite story among diplomatists to the effect that some benefactor once offered a prize—a fabulous sum— for an essay on the elephant. It was to be competed for by savants of different nations, and with great care the representatives were selected and went to work.

The Englishman equipped himself with guns and ammunition and, with a safari, he entered the jungles of Africa and India, shot many elephants, had himself photographed with one foot on the prostrate head of one of his victims, and returning to Albion, wrote his essay called, "My Experiences as an Elephant Killer."

What They Did.

The German shut himself in his library, digested tome after tome, and finally produced, in 11,000 pages a "Prolegomena to the Study of Elephants."

The Pole filled up his drovsky with boxes of cigars, had himself driven to his most remote estate, and there inured himself in the loftiest tower of the castle, where, after walking 'round and 'round and smoking cigar after cigar, he wrote "Elephants and the Polish Question."

The Russian obtained several gallons of vodka, repaired to a dungeon inhabited by rats and, after drinking all the vodka and making friends with all the rats, he emerged with a three-page pamphlet called "Do Elephants Exist?"

Two Catches.

Now, about this tale there have always been two catches—one is that nobody ever saw any of the essays, so there has been some doubt in scientific circles of its authenticity. The other is that almost immediately on hearing it, the question arises, "What would the American write?"

Many unkind answers have been given to that question, but at least we can say something definite. An American has written an essay on the elephant.

He is Dr. F. C. Benedict, and the title of his monograph is "The Physiology of the Elephant," published by the Carnegie Institute of Washington, D. C. Dr. Benedict is one of the most scholarly American investigators of nutrition—calories, etc.

In spite of stories to the contrary, the elephant has a span of life about the same as man's. We are about the most long lived of animals. It is often whispered that mother elephants carry their babies two or three years: let's get the record straight—it is 20 months.

Weighs 200 Pounds.

A new-born elephant weighs about 200 pounds. When you hear a proud father boasting about his new 8½-pound heir, just mention that to him. Can't you see a proud old tusker coming down to the swamp and telling his elephant pals with a wink, "we had a strapping 250-pound boy at our house last night"?

An elephant drinks about 50 gallons of water a day, preferably warm—the British influence.

The metabolic rate of an average elephant is 4,900 calories a day—only about twice yours. But a full grown elephant produces as much heat as 20 men.

They never go on reducing diets, which accounts for a lot.

THE GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Auld Acquaintance.

"Why Carrie Finch! Of all people! How are you? . . . You know I didn't recognize you at first—you've taken on some weight, haven't you? You know I've taken on a few pounds myself. Well, I suppose we might all just as well make up our minds to the fact that we're not as young as we once were.

"Don't tell me this great big girl is your's! Why, she's almost as big as you are! What her name? . . . Jane? Who's that for? . . . Oh, her grandmother, Mott . . . Well, you know I believe she takes after the Motts . . . they're all heavy set. Your Uncle Luther must have weighed about 250 when he died, didn't he? You know it was so funny about him—he never would tell his weight.

"Still, I believe she looks a lot like the Finches. She's got the Finch eyes . . . and the nose—I'd know that Finch nose anywhere. How old is she? . . . Twelve! . . . What do you know about that! My Betty'll be 12 next month. What grade is she in? . . . The sixth? Betty's in junior high.

"How's Bob? . . . Has he changed much? . . . Neither has George. Still at Markem's? . . . George is in business for himself now. Yes, he says you never get anywhere working for the other fellow. He says he feels like a new man since he's his own boss.

"How is your mother? . . . Mary Chipp was telling me she had failed a lot in the last year. How old is your mother anyway? . . . Well, that's funny. You know, I thought she was older than mamma. Mamma'll be 71 next month.

"Oh, and your sister, Grace—how is she? . . . Hasn't married yet? . . . Still at Tuttle's? . . . How long has she been with them, anyway? . . . You know I tried to get in touch with Grace two summers ago when my sister Harriet was here. I must have left half a dozen calls for her. You know Grace and Harriet were in high school together . . . Grace is about 32, isn't she—I know she's six months older than Harriet. I know they graduated four years after we did.

"Harriet? . . . Oh she's fine. She's got a darling baby . . . and a marvelous husband—just gives her everything. Oh, by the way, how is your brother Bert? . . . Well, I believe I did hear he was having trouble with his wife. Did he get his divorce?

"Oh, say, guess who I saw the other day! Mabel Trotter! Yes, she's gotten a divorce, too. You remember what a crush she had on Bob—before you two got married? Mabel looks grand. I don't see how she does it. Of course, though, she always had a good figure . . . I always say that's nine-tenths of it. You know I was trying to think how old Mabel was. I believe she's a little younger than us.

"Oh, say, I'll tell you another of the old gang's that's here—Sally Weeks. Sally doesn't look well—you know having your teeth out changes you a lot. You know there's so many of the old bunch here that I was just telling George we ought to get them together sometime for a reunion. The Boyd Twitters are here—he's just as much of a cut-up as ever—and the Fiddlers—Sadie's blondined her hair, and oh, yes, Gladys Bounce is here, she's got the cutest twins that play the piano—honestly there's enough people here from Rosebud to form a club.

"Now I want you to come out real soon and bring Grace. You tell her I've got a beau for her. He's a widower—all his children are grown. I know she'll like that. George says he's around 63, but he doesn't look a day over 50. He's awfully nice, and he's got a pension from the Spanish-American War. Oh, yes, and you tell Grace, Wade Chirp is here and he hasn't married yet. He's just the same old Wade. You remember the funny stories he used to tell? Well, he still tells them. He's loads of fun.

"I really want to get the old gang together real soon. You know its a shame how when you get in a big city you lose sight of all your old friends. We could have Mabel. I know she'd love to see Bob and you again, and then there's the Blankheads and old Mrs. Noble and the Oxleys. We could have such fun talking over old times. You know life is so short we just ought to see more of each other."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, April 4.

HEARING that Pearl White, first of the great blonde movie queens, was steaming into port, I scurried down to the Hudson pier the other day to be part of the small reception committee on hand to meet and greet the heroine of the "Perils of Pauline" and other serials that panicked us over 20 (my goodness!) years ago.

ALICE HUGHES.

I don't deny I had a bit of a shock. Nobody should ever meet, in maturity, the idols of their childhood. I remember Pearlie as beautifully made, with huge blue eyes and a simple, classic pan. Now, of course, she's wiser and wealthier, also older and fatter. She's lived in Paris since 1924, has been married and divorced three times, and once spent five weeks in a convent asking divine forgiveness for this frantic husband-shuffling.

Now she's flippant, sophisticated and over here to look after her investments, which she told me were "railroad stocks and some sort of bond things." She loves champagne, and demonstrates her affection for the heady juice of the grape. She's through working.

"I'm too young for Marie Dressler parts and too old for girl roles," she told me. "Anyway, I don't need the money. But I'd like to see what Hollywood is all about—I've never seen it. All my pictures were made in New Jersey and Long Island." All this as she posed on the boat deck for the camera-pointers.

I fought my way back to business a trifle sad. She bore no resemblance whatever to the dream girl of my kid days in the Elite Theater. Of course, why should she? Just the same, I'm going to dodge such meetings from now on!

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—You'll know she's a New Yorker if, when she stomps on your bad toe, she snarls instead of "I beg your pardon" or "Sorry"—"Par me!" . . .

* * * *

* * * *

Perils of residence in this town, where Fate falls on you from the sky or leaps up from the pavement! Miss Elizabeth Cargill was a-walking along Tremont avenue tending to her own business when a heavy rug, being beaten no an apartment house roof, blew away and knocked Elizabeth flatter than a restaurant flapjack. Had to go to the hospital . . .

How's this for a name for a red-hot dancer in a musical show—Lea Perrin? That's the adopted tag of a limber girl in a show here—who figures that what is sauce for the steak is sauce for the tired businessman! . . .

A local department store already is taking orders for the official coronation program at 50 cents a throw. Available here the twenty-fourth, the 32-page book contains a foreword by the Duke of Gloucester, an ode by Poet Laureate Masefield, a piece by John Drinkwater and the whole ceremony in detail—not to mention pictures of the principal actors. That makes it easy for us all. Read that, play 'God Save the King" on the phonograph—and we've saved a mess of time and a couple of thousand American dollars! . . .

Barbara Hutton's pop, Franklin, elects himself trailer champion of the U. S. A. by darting around the country with two luxurious rolling homes—one for day, one for night. His wife, Irene, however, sits calmly in the Waldorf here. Frank, the old gypsy, will end up at a nephew's home in California. Wonder what Babs thinks of such common didoes?

Now that short gloves and short sleeves leave practically the whole arm stark nekkid, one of the best of the town beauty-magicians has a treatment to prettify it from fingertip to elbow. Fingers are done, and then the forearm is whitened with a foamy concoction applied with a paint brush! It takes an hour—but what's an hour to a Gotham gadabout with plenty of time and red shellac on her hands?

PlaneCompany Is Considering Europe Service

Commerce Department Holds Talks; 5,000-Mile Ship Designed.

High speed, nonstop air service to continental Europe came closer to actuality yesterday as the Department of Commerce announced that "private talks are now being held between officials of a large airplane manufacturing company and certain responsible parties."

Col. J. Monroe Johnson, The Post learned last night, has received a letter from Glenn L. Martin, president of the Glenn L. Martin Co., telling of the conferences and declaring a huge plane, capable of a 5,000-mile nonstop flight, has been designed.

Talk Held in New York.

Martin, in a statement from his home in Baltimore, corroborated the Commerce Department's information, and said "more will be forthcoming within the week." The talks, he said, were being held in New York City.

"A project as large as this will be," he said, "must of necessity be handled by a New York City concern."

As his reason for refusing to reveal the names of the "responsible parties," Martin said the "transatlantic line's American port has not yet been determined. Nor, in accordance with Postoffice Department rules, are the air mail bids out."

To Cruise at 175 M. P. H.

According to its present design, the plane will carry 40 passengers and 5,000 pounds of cargo at a top speed of 240 miles an hour.

Cruising speed will be 175 miles an hour. The plane it was predicted, will make the eastbound flight in 18½ hours and the westbound in 21 hours.

The range of the plane, 5,000 miles, is 1,500 miles longer than the great circle distance between New York and Europe.

These talks are not to be confused with the transatlantic flights between England, Ireland, Canada and the United States, which are under consideration by Pan-American Airways.

On the Air Today

Many trumpet blasts and announcer's superlatives have passed into the great radio beyond since the Women's National Radio Committee announced its six annual awards for radio programs, voted by its membership as the outstanding network presentations of the year, last week. However, due to the undenied ravages of a pesky bug, which gave this desk its undivided attention last week, this seems to be the first opportunity to list the year's awards for those who missed the announcement on the air last Wednesday.

The committee also announces the "best musical program award" at the top of the list. Inasmuch as the committee's work is principally directed toward raising the standards of broadcasting it is to be expected the "best" program category should be in the realm of "best" music.

To the "Sunday Evening Hour" goes the 1936 prime honor. In this category the G. M. Symphony Concerts, which are more or less in competition for audience honors Sunday nights, and Wallenstein's "Sinfonietta" received honorable mention.

A special award went to WOR, of Newark, and the Mutual network which it serves as key station, for its contributions to serious music through its consistent presentation of stadium concerts and operas in New York City through the summer season, and another special award went to Walter Damrosch, as the "man who has (10 years ago) seen the possibilities of radio dissemination of musical character and who has done more for good music over the air than any one man in this country."

Other honorable mentions went to Bing Crosby's "Music Hall," "America's Town Meeting of the Air," the Metropolitan Opera broadcasts, Lowell Thomas, H. V. Kaltenborn, Kathryn Cravens, "Wilderness Road," and the "Singing Lady."

That's the story for another year. Remember, if you disagree, that the awards are being made by serious minded persons who are striving to replace as much drivel and hot-cha in broadcasting with worthwhile entertainment, on as high an educational plane, as possible.

Dr. Ralph W. Chaney Unravels Secret of First Stages 23 Years After Alaska Eruption Sent Haze Over Washington.

When, in June, 1912, Alaska's Mount Katmai quivered foreboddingly for a moment, and then violently erupted, it did not do merely local damage.

Over Kodiak Island, 100 miles away, it threw a deep blanket of ash; on Cordova, 360 miles away, it rained great quantities of acid; in Vancouver, B. C., 2,000 miles away, its fumes tarnished brass, and down to the Bureau of Standards in this city, 4,500 miles away, it sent a floating haze!

A year later, Kodiak Island was still covered with destruction. At that time, Dr. Ralph W. Chaney, Carnegie Institution paleontologist in search of scientific knowledge, stopped there.

Though most of the inhabitants, sent scurrying by the erupting volcano, had returned to their homes, the lack of grass made it impossible for cattle to graze. Moreover, salmon, on which the fishing industry largely depends, halted by the ash-clogged rivers, could not make their annual up-stream migration.

Surveying the broken island, Dr. Chaney, realized he had found the perfect laboratory in which to follow, step by step, the mysterious process of plant fossilization.

Here, he thought, buried under the ash, and thus hidden from decay, the Alaskan forests of 1912 might be preserved for future study.

Wondering how long the effects of the eruption would endure, and hoping to intercept this process of a fossilization, he then determined to return to the island at some distant time.

Twenty-three years elapsed and then Dr. Chaney, in 1936, left Washington and went back to his Kodiak "laboratory." On arrival he found, he said, "no haze of dust in the air, and the hills rose from the shores in unbroken greenness. There was no ash on the branches of the spruce trees which shaded the road at the north end of the island. The passage of 23 years had obliterated all the obvious evidence of the disaster of 1912."

Further search, however, revealed almost an inch of 23-year-old ash lying beneath a thick layer of moss which covered the lower branches of these trees. He found, too, that together with hundreds of cottonwoods, the lower branches of many older spruces were dead.

What progress, thought Dr. Chaney, is the process of fossilization making? He started immediately for the island's small lakes. (It was in the small lakes of the United States that many fossil bearing ash deposits had been found.)

In Silver Lake, which is less than half a mile in width, he dug up great numbers of embedded spruce needles, cones, and leaves of alder.

Long Trip Justified.

Here, as in the Miocene deposits of the John Day Basin in Oregon, vast sprinklings of fossilized conifers lay beneath the mud and gravel. The process of fossilization had begun and Dr. Chaney's long trip had been justified.

Though it can not be hoped that Mount Katmai will erupt again, within the next 25 years, thus producing, for the purposes of scientific study, the second stage in the process of fossilization, Dr. Chaney has, at least, gained the secret of the first stage.

His greatest sorrow, however, is that a single human being can see only a small part of such a slowly moving geologic process. But Dr. Chaney is resigned. He knows that the pyramid of human knowledge must be built slowly, brick by brick.

He has written fossilization's first chapter. In many thousands of years, he says, the story will be completed.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE AT LOWER COST

...if you have a good driving record

MORE THAN 140,000 responsible car owners are saving a substantial part of the yearly cost of insuring their cars by dealing direct with Liberty Mutual. Over and above the savings they make, this group is a powerful force in the promotion of safer driving throughout America.

If you have a good driving record—if you believe that good drivers should get automobile insurance at lower cost than dangerous drivers—you are invited to send for the free booklet which completely explains this common-sense plan. Just mail the convenient coupon below. No obligation.

HOW THIS PLAN SAVES YOU MONEY

Fewer accidents: By placing your policy with Liberty Mutual, you do not have to pay for as many costly accidents as you would in companies which select policyholders with less care.

Lower expenses: By dealing direct with Liberty Mutual, you save a substantial part of the ordinary insurance company's selling expenses.

Cash dividends: Savings which result from fewer accidents and lower expenses are returned to you in cash dividends, which have amounted to 20% of premiums paid each year since Liberty Mutual was organized in 1912. You could have saved one-fifth of the yearly cost of insuring your car if you had used our "preferred risk" plan.

WHY POLICYHOLDERS CAUSE FEWER ACCIDENTS

Naturally we cannot select 100% perfect drivers. And even the best drivers sometimes become involved in accidents, either through momentary carelessness or conditions beyond their control. But records show that Liberty Mutual policyholders are much better than the average drivers.

IF YOU HAVE AN ACCIDENT

Liberty Mutual recognizes that accidents may happen to the best drivers. In the event of accident, we will protect you against loss and defend you against damage suits. No insurance company does more to keep its policyholders out of court and out of trouble.

LIBERTY MUTUAL GIVES NATION-WIDE SERVICE

No matter where you may become involved in an accident, you will receive prompt, skilled service. We have branch offices, in 67 cities—more than 500 skilled claims investigators—attorneys all over America.

HOW YOU CAN QUALIFY FOR THESE SAVINGS

If you have a good driving record—if you do not have a high annual mileage—if you keep your car in good condition—you can qualify under our strict but fair underwriting rules.

HOW POLICYHOLDERS ARE SELECTED

Most of our business comes from one man telling another. We are able to select policyholders more carefully than other companies because Liberty Mutual is owned and operated by its own policyholders—by insurance buyers who have joined together to reduce the cost of insurance. We deal directly with policyholders—through salaried representatives or by mail.

LIBERTY MUTUAL IS A STRONG COMPANY

It is one of the largest and strongest companies in America, because it has lower losses and lower expenses. Today it has Assets of $47,131,487; Liabilities of $34,441,522; Special Reserves of $5,650,000; and a Surplus of $7,039,965 (December 31, 1936). More than $52,000,000 has been returned to policyholders in dividends since 1912.

Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937

By Bob Burns.

Sometimes I think the system of punishin' law-breakers by fine is not altogether fair. It hurts some people more to dig up the price of a fine than it does others. That's the reason punishment by fine is never gonna stop crime among people who can afford it.

I knew one old man down home who use'ta hang out with the boys on Saturday night and he always wound up by gittin' in trouble. He was brought before the judge one Saturday night and the judge fined him $5. The old man dug in his pocket and pulled out a bill and handed it to the judge and he says "Well, judge, I been workin' pretty steady this week—here's $10—that'll pay me up to and includin' next Saturday night."

THE FEDERAL DIARY

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

"More Deadly . . ."

Kipling sang of it romantically . . . the Federal Bureau of Investigation treats it statistically . . . But both drive toward the same point: The female of the species is more deadly than the male . . .

The F. B. I. comments: "Women were charged with practically all types of crimes during 1936. A comparison of the charges placed against an average group of 100 females and an average group of 100 males arrested and fingerprinted yields interesting facts . . .

"Generally speaking, the tendency of members of the female sex to commit crimes of violence against the person was more pronounced than in the case of the male sex. Whereas slightly more than 7 of every 100 males arrested were charged with those types of crimes."

* * * *

Women, however, played a minor part, numerically, in the perpetration of such crimes as robbery, burglary and automobile theft . . . Males also led in cases of drunkenness, concealed weapons and driving while intoxicated . . . but, points out the F. B. I., females were much more prominently engaged in the commission of offenses of larceny and in violations of narcotic drug laws and liquor laws." . . . But all of that isn't particularly in point . . . It's the crimes of emotion, committed against the person—some gal out to get some other gal or some man who's done her wrong—that Kipling was talking about and that the F. B. I. points out, but without any intentional emphasis on the "more deadly" theme.

If you're interested in aviation, have a talk right away with Bob Ryan, of Procurement Division Lodge 322, of Detroit, for violation ious to organize an aviation club among Government workers . . . Ryan may be contacted at the Procurement Division, Line 2285 . . .

And while thinking of the A. F. G. E., it is learned that President Stengle quite recently canceled the certificate of affiliation held by WPA Lodge 322, of Detroit, for violation of article II, section 3, of the A. F. G. E. constitution . . . This provision holds that strikes against the Government authority will not be tolerated . . . Lodge 322 engaged in a sit-down strike against the Government recently and President Stengle's action found unanimous approval of the executive council.

And, while thinking of President Stengle: He will be in Boston tomorrow night to address A. F. G. E. members in a big meeting at the Touraine Hotel . . . It is the first occasion on which a national president of the organization has visited New England . . . They're tendering him a banquet and a floor show.

Lo, the poor Indian, who never did want much traffic with the fast and fancy doodads of the world, is planning to clamp down on people who drive recklessly through one reservation, at least. Either Lo, himself, or someone else on the reservation has suggested making reckless drivers literally put labels on themselves. A truck has been set aside for the purpose . . . On its sides are painted in words big enough to be seen: "I Neglect My Car—I am a Reckless Driver—I am Reckless." The careless drivers would be compelled to drive the truck as part of a safety campaign.

Aid for 3,000 Idle Is Demanded At Church Meeting of Citizens

Speeches Depict Plight of Needy Families; Funds Urged.

Fifteen hundred persons of all creeds and social positions demonstrated for Washington's 3,000 unemployed "employables" in First Congregational Church yesterday afternoon, and resolved to "pound the doors of Congress" until their demands are heard.

A program of a dozen stirring speeches graphically depicting the distress of the Capital's needy reached its climax in the indorsement of a set of resolutions, which Coleman Jennings, Community Chest leader and chairman of the mass meeting, said "will be found to have teeth in them."

The resolutions called for an organization to carry the battle for adequate relief funds for the District of Columbia to Congress.

Specifically this organization, which will take the form of a citizens' committee, is to ask for:

1. "A deficiency appropriation of at least $100,000 a month for the remainder of the present fiscal year . . ."

2. "An additional appropriation of at least $1,000,000 (to) be made available to the Board of Public Welfare."

Seek Closer Organization.

Efforts are to be made also to effect a closely knit organization of relief agencies in the District to meet the needs of distressed families, and the Board of Public Welfare will be urged to "base relief grants upon verified need rather than employability."

"It is intolerable that we should go out of this meeting, which has reported to us the dire need of our own people, without these plans for going ahead," declared Jennings.

And Dr. William McClellan, civic leader, who made the principal address said, "This is not merely a job of charity . . . This is a civic problem which affects the well being of all of us . . . The people needing relief are human beings, and not worms. But even a worm will turn."

Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington Cathedral, told the audience that the barring of 3,000 persons who are able to work, but can't find jobs, from relief rolls means that a total of 10,000 men, women and children in Washington are not getting the necessities of life.

"A Disgraceful Situation."

"This is not only a shocking situation; it is a disgraceful situation," declared Edward Keating, editor of Labor. "Who is responsible: Some say the Bureau of the Budget, and the Bureau of the Budget has just O. K.d appropriations of $1,000,000,000 for the Army and Navy in peace times."

To deny funds for the needy because such action would increase taxes "is the argument of a miserable Scrooge, and not a blessed Samaritan," said Joseph P. Tumulty, who was secretary to President Wilson.

"Let me say that it is not easy to lead men to heaven on an empty stomach," Tumulty added. "If we could but understand, if we could but feel and visualize the deep tragedy of unemployment, of poverty and hunger, would not our sense of emotion be aroused so that, like Crusaders of old, we would be ready to fight for the blessed things that are the web and woof of human service."

Joseph D. Kaufman, vice chairman of the Community Chest, who is familiarly known to Washingtonians as "Radio Joe," said: "Mercy dictates our proclaiming from the housetops our interest in, and willingness to, do battle for these destitutes. Justice requires our sticking with the battle till the light prevails."

Asserting that Washington lives and moves "and has its lack of being under Federal paternalism," Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, president of the National Training School for Women and Girls, appealed "to the paternal father, the Federal Government, for aid for its starving children of its own household."

The extent to which many of the distressed "employables" have been driven to these extremes was made clear in three dramatic case stories told by Maj. Campbell C. Johnson, executive secretary of the Twelfth Street Branch of the Y. M. C. A.; the Rev. Laurence J. Shehan, assistant director of Catholic Charities, and William H. Slavin, director of the Family Service Bureau.

Slavin told the story of a family in which the father had been working, "but was not making enough to support his wife and babies, and not able to get help anywhere. The "skilled workers" job which the father held with the WPA ran out, and the family ran into reverses, including the death of a baby.

"You have had all the facts in this deplorable situation," declared Dr. McClellan in the final and principal address of the meeting. "Thousands of families in Washington are in dire need of enough to keep body and soul together and can't get it. Public and private agencies are stretching their resources of men and money to the limit. The need they see daily and cannot possibly meet is appalling."

Receiving House Opposed by Collins for Lack of Segregation.

The 1938 District supply bill now before the House has aroused a storm of controversy, principally because of its 21 legislative riders which provide for sweeping municipal reforms. How were these changes decided upon? What do they mean? Whom do they affect? Why were appropriations for some agencies increased and others decreased? Following is the third in a series of articles dealing with these vital and interesting questions.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Chairman Ross A. Collins of the House sub-committee on District appropriations lopped off the $38,000 item requested to operate the detention house another year because the idea of diseased children mingling with healthy ones did not set well with him. He is the father of a son and a daughter himself.

Grady H. Leonard, one of the most popular and well-liked officials in the District government, is superintendent of the home, which last year had a daily average of 44 boys and girls under 17. He receives $2,400 a year. Altogether the home has 16 employes, not counting two part-time physicians who made periodical visits.

"Unfit for Children."

In its report to the House, Collins' committee said "the quarters provided for this activity are unfit for the care of children. Children of all ages and classes are, of necessity, forced to intermingle to an alarming degree."

"The committee believes that under existing conditions attempts to segregate children cannot be effective."

So it was decided that the institution be abolished, and $12,000 was allotted for the operation of a system of boarding homes, under which it is believed "better care can be given and a more effective segregation secured."

Collins told Elwood Street, welfare director, he thought the home should be abolished when the latter testified before the committee.

Many Police Cases

"I think it would be better to put them (children) out on the streets than to have them huddled there together, with little tots three years old associating with children with venereal diseases and criminals," the Mississippian asserted.

The boys and girls brought to the home, all under the age of 17, may be police cases, waifs deserted by parents, lost children, victims of family evictions or District wards awaiting transfer to permanent-care institutions. Last year 3,119 were admitted, 2,735 of them being police cases.

Va. Federation Calls Parley on 4 C.I.O. Unions

Suspended Groups Comprise Nearly One-Fourth of State Enrollment.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 4.—The Virginia Federation of Labor at its convention in Lynchburg May 17 will be called on, W. D. Anderson, legislative chairman, said here today, to consider the executive board's suspension of four unions affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization.

The suspended unions, which represented nearly one-fourth of the total membership of the Virginia Federation, are the United Mine Workers, United Textile Workers, Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the International Ladies Garment Workers.

Anderson said that "the Virginia Federation wished to remain neutral in this C. I. O.-A. F. L. squabble but under our instructions from the A. F. L. we could take no action."

E. J. Shave, of Hampton, secretary of the federation, said that "the State federation is an A. F. of L. affiliate and will continue so."

Meanwhile, approximately 12,000 idle coal mine workers in southwest Virginia who are members of the United Mine Workers organization and who were not affected by an agreement reached in New York Friday night, were notified by mine managements that operations would continue suspended Monday pending the signing of a renewed wage-hour contract.

Women strikers at the Covington plant of the Industrial Rayon Corporation were allowed to visit the plant today but were required to leave at night.

Phelps Skips 2 Problems At Town Hall

Writer's Charming Talk Leaves Controversies Still Up in Air.

William Lyon Phelps, who talks as charmingly as he writes, took a Town Hall audience on a two-hour literary excursion at the Shoreham last night. He started with Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," worked back to Virgil and concluded by reciting the soliloquy in Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

He talked of "trashy" books, "oversexed" books and "profound" books. He displayed a lore that fascinated the overflow audience. But, after the thunderous applause died down, he had left behind him:

A burning question—unanswered.

Rhett-Scarlett Mystery.

The mystery concerned "Gone With the Wind." Dr. Phelps told of visiting Margaret Mitchell in Georgia, and of the long talk they had about the characters in the book, particularly Scarlett O'Hara and Rhett Butler. What happened to these beyond that final paragraph, when they were saparated? That question had bothered him, Dr. Phelps said, and he put it up to the author.

"I told her," Dr. Phelps said, "that, in my opinion, Capt. Butler couldn't help himself; that he would have to go back to Scarlett. I told her that I didn't think he would be able to stay away."

Here the Town Hall audience leaned forward, expecting that Miss Mitchell's reply would clear up the mystery. But Dr. Phelps (or, better, Miss Mitchell) let them down.

Dr. Phelps recalled that Miss Mitchell said:

"I haven't any idea whether he'll come back or not."

Filth Worries Librarian.

The burning question that Dr. Phelps sidestepped was put to him by white-bearded George F. Bowerman, librarian of the District of Columbia, a member of the Town Hall panel.

"You have discussed kind books, good and pleasant books," Dr. Bowerman said. "What about strong, unpleasant, over-sexed books? I'm damned if I do put them in the library, and I am damned if I don't. Right now I am wrestling with James T. Farrell's trilogy that includes 'A World I Never Made' and 'Studs Lonigan.' What am I to do?"

Dr. Phelps, who taught English at Yale for 41 years, told Librarian Bowerman it was all a matter of taste; that he personally did not like profanity and obscenity written simply for the purpose of shocking people, and that, in his opinion, those who wrote that way were guilty of "intellectual immaturity."

Condemn Censorship.

"But," said Dr. Bowerman later on, "ought I to give these books to them or not?"

"I wish I could help," Dr. Phelps said. "I really don't know what to say. I wouldn't recommend such books and I wouldn't advertise them."

At the same time, he condemned censorship, and so did Dr. Bowerman. And there the problem rested.

Dr. Phelps said there were two kinds of readers—those who read to remember and those who read to forget. Throughout his life, he said, he had been trying to put those in the second group into the first group, so that they might read, not for forgetfulness, but for intellectual stimulation.

"Trash" Problem Minimized.

He told parents not to worry if their children read "trash." This, he said, was better than reading nothing, and would develop a taste for something more wholesome later on.

He said he believed he had saved the lives of many bankers during the depression by getting them to read detective mysteries.

"You'll find," he said, "that many intelligent people read detective and murder stories. An excursion into the underworld is good for them. It is the unintelligent people who read romantic slush."

One of the finest tributes ever paid an author, he said, was that paid Somerset Maugham by Gene Tunney. The occasion, he said, was the afternoon of the night that Tunney was to fight Jack Dempsey in Chicago. Tunney had two hours to kill, Dr. Phelps recalled, and he spent them reading "Of Human Bondage."

Richard B. Hayden, a riverman who lives at Gregory's Boat House, Sixth and Water streets southwest, sat down on the river bank yesterday to relax himself and ponder on life. A water-soaked roll of paper attracted him.

Picking it up, Hayden discovered that the roll was made up of $5 and $10 bills and that they totaled $565.

Hayden could have used that money, and so could his wife and three children. But being an honest man, he took it to the Harbor Police Precinct. On the books there was a report of the theft on April 1 of $645 from the offices of the Norfolk and Washington Steamship Co., located a block away.

Bills Are Identified.

Harbor police summoned Odell Smith, secretary-treasurer of the steamship company, and he identified the bills as those stolen from his office.

Later the police arrested Robert (Aye) Bogan, 28, colored, of the 1200 block of Sixth street southwest, and held him for questioning in connection with the robbery. He is a porter for the company.

How the bills got to the river bank where Riverman Hayden found them—whether they were washed up there or hidden there—was a question the police were not ready to answer. Said Hayden:

"It's always been my belief that honesty pays. Besides my wife feels the same way. For years she has been going back to the grocery store every time the clerk gives her a penny, or two, too much change. She wouldn't think of letting me keep the money I found this morning."

Believes in Honesty.

Last night, after he had turned his $565 roll of bills to the safe keeping of Harbor Police, Hayden said he still thought honesty pays.

"Sure," he said, "now my conscience is clear, and I feel fine—and I feel kind of relieved . . . Say, suppose I'd have hanged on to that dough—and it had turned out to be 'hot.'"

Materialism Offers Little, Cleric Asserts

Rev. Joseph Loughran Says Religion Only Way to Transcend Senses.

The material things of life provide only a starvation diet, unless, through religion, man finds some way to transcend the world of the senses, declared the Rev. Joseph S. Loughran, pastor, in his sermon yesterday morning at the Cleveland Park Congregational Church.

"Materialism makes the astounding claim that matter in motion is the sole explanation of all existence, including the intellectual and moral life of man," said the minister.

According to its philosophy "all of man's cravings for truth, all of his love for beauty, all of his sacrifices for conscience are only the by-products of blind energy, and his soul's loftiest aspirations will be dissipated when the heart ceases to beat.

"These are but a few of the devastating implications of a purely materialistic view of life and human destiny," he asserted.

"But religion teaches that there is something in the universe that transcends our world of the senses, and cannot be blotted out by physical force, and that is spirit and soul. These are the sources of human personality and of man's creative genius. It is spirit and soul that makes him a responsible individual, and capable of sublime heroism and self-sacrifice. Man is kindred to a deathless and divine life, not to the dust.

"A profound student of philosophy recently has said 'Man never is so incomprehensible as when materialism explains him, and never so luminous as when religion leaves him a mystery.'"

Auto Crashes Fatal to 3 in Capital Area

Automobile accidents took three lives in the Washington area yesterday.

One of those killed was a retired Army private, Valentine Walsh, 67, residing at Pitcher Inn, near Savage, Md., who died after being struck by an automobile on the Washington-Baltimore boulevard, near Savage, Saturday night.

David Jackson, 13, colored, of Silver Spring, Md., died yesterday in Freedmen's Hospital from injuries received March 13 while riding as a passenger on an automobile driven by his father, William Jackson. The car hit a telephone post near Silver Spring.

He was admitted to the hospital suffering a fracture of the frontal bone of the head.

The body of George L. Miller, 40, of Howard County, apparently the victim of a hit-run driver, was found on the Washington boulevard near Halethorpe. Miss Hazel C. Posey, 18, of Arlington, Va., driving with three girl companions, discovered the body. They brought it to a hospital at Baltimore.

Laurel Man Held.

Police at Laurel were holding D. H. Brady, 25, a Laurel barber, pending an inquest into the Walsh death. Walsh died of a fractured neck. The body was sent to the W. C. White funeral home at Laurel, while authorities tried to find relatives or friends of Walsh.

Two persons were seriously injured yesterday when their automobile ran into the rear of a street car unloading passengers at Sixteenth street and Rhode Island avenue northeast.

William K. Price, 35, of Lincoln University, Chester, Pa., the owner of the car, and Betty Peal, 27, of Oxford, Pa., who was driving, were removed to Casualty Hospital, where Price was treated for a fractured left leg, severe lacerations of right hand and possible fracture of the skull, and Miss Peal for lacerations of the wrist, face and body.

Girl Struck on Street.

While running across the street, Evelina Louise Robertson, 11, 340 Fifteenth street northeast, was struck by a street car in the 700 block of Eighth street southeast and knocked down.

She was removed in an automobile to Casualty Hospital for treatment of lacerations of the scalp. The street car was operated by F. N. Boyd, 40, of 1112 D street northeast.

Four persons were injured in an automobile collision at Thirteenth and Q streets northwest, when a car driven by Edward Ward, 26, colored, 1012 Florida avenue northwest, collided with a car operated by Francis L. Horn, 25, of 2701 Fourteenth street northwest.

Byron Nelson's 283 Overtakes Guldahl to Win Masters' Golf by 2 Strokes

Nats Buy Al Simmons of Detroit for $15,000 to Bolster Hitting

This Morning

Lakeland, Fla.

A portly, red-faced chap, obviously overweight at 160 pounds, walked into the Nats' hotel today, looked about as if in search for a familiar face and then accosted Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington club.

POVICH.

"Hello, Mr. Griffith," he said, extending a hand.

"Hello," said Griffith, shaking hands, but no sign of recognition came to the face of the Nats' owner. Griffith was very cute about it, though, adding, "glad to see you again."

But his visitor was hep to Griffith's confusion, and there was more than a trace of dismay in his countenance as he withdrew his hand and said, "I'm Matthews," as if Griffith should certainly remember him now.

"Matthews?" repeated Griffith mechanically, as if turning the searchlight of his memory on this name he was supposed to recall.

* * * *

"Shake Hands, Boy."

And then Griffith recollected with a start. "Wid Matthews; sure, you're Wid Matthews. I should have known that all along, consarn it. Why, Wid, how are you? I am glad to see you. Shake hands, Wid," continued the Nats' owner, forgetting in his excitement that they had already gone through that ceremony.

* * * *

Lemme look at you. Why, no wonder I didn't recognize you. Say, you've grown up. You've gotten fat. You were only a little tyke when I had you back there in 1924."

* * * *

Matthews was, indeed, a little tyke when the Nats had him in 1924, the smallest player in the big leagues and one of the most picturesque. They called him Sparky then—Sparky Matthews, the spark plug of the Washington team that brought to the Capital its first American League pennant in history.

* * * *

'Spirit of '24'

Washington fans loved the little guy—and with reason. He was the spirit of the new Nats of 1924, his 145 pounds a bundle of fury out there on the field and his sharp tongue and shrill voice wafting fighting words continually toward the enemy dugout. And Wid's vest-pocket catches in centerfield, with his hands cupped basket fashion, well, they just tickled the Washington fans who were rooting for the little guy.

* * * *

He had been up in the big leagues the year before with Connie Mack's Athletics, but Mack sent him back to Milwaukee. Griffith took him on in June, 1924, and the name of Wid Matthews began to figure daily in accounts of the Nats' games. But let Griffith take the story up from here:

"He just about won the pennant for us, no fooling. We were in sixth place the day in Detroit that Wid joined the team. Before we finished that road trip, we were in first place, and Wid was the reason.

"He was a real spark plug. He began to tell our boys how they were going to win the pennant and then he went out there himself and played real pennant ball. They couldn't get him out and he always was a marvel in the outfield.

* * * *

What a Boy!

"I'll never foret that day in Yankee Stadium. We had two doubleheaders with the Yanks and if we could win 'em both, we'd return home at the top of the league. Well, the Yanks were laying for us, and it was a mighty important series.

* * * *

"I'll never forget Matthews that day. He stepped right up there leading off the batting order and banged the first ball Bob Shawkey pitched for a three-base hit to centerfield. Sam Rice stepped up and hit a home run right afterward; Joe Judge got a triple, and Goose Goslin got another homer and we had four runs before anybody was out.

* * * *

"Well, we cleaned up the Yanks in all four games, but it was that first sock by Wid that showed 'em we were going to do it. The Yanks never recovered from that."

'Tell 'Em the Rest'

In the light of Matthews' inspiring performance with the Nats it is strangely incongruous that later the same season, Griffith traded him to Sacramento and he didn't figure in the World Series.

"But I can explain that," said Griffith. "We wanted Earl McNealy from the Sacramento club, and they wouldn't deal with us for McNealy unless we'd give 'em Matthews. He was the only player they'd have. So I had to give him up, but I hated to do it."

"Tell 'em the rest, Griff," urged Matthews.

"The rest? What rest?" And then, "Oh, yeah. Well, it seems like our boys forgot to cut Wid in on a share of the 1924 World Series money after all he had done for the team, and I was sore. But I couldn't forget Wid. Even before the others got paid for their part in the World Series, I sent Wid my personal check for a thousand dollars."

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Ga., April 4.—Blazing over the home stretch with a spectacular 32, Byron Nelson, gangling Irishman from Reading, Pa., outfought a brilliant field today to win Augusta's fourth national masters' golf tournament featuring the annual return to competition of Bobby Jones.

Stroking masterfully down the final nine holes in a par-smashing pace, the 25-year-old professional finished with a 72-hole total of 283 to conquer the all-star ranks by 2 strokes.

Nelson overhauled Ralph Guldahl, the big Norwegian from St. Louis, who stumbled in the stretch to take a 76 on the last lap and wind up with a 185, a stroke ahead of Ed Dudley, Philadelphian and professional of the home course.

Two Under Par.

After traversing the outgoing nine in 38 and apparently shooting himself out of the top prize of $1,500, young Nelson unloosed some golfing magic for his incoming 32 and a neat 70, 2 under par. Nelson led the first two days of play with rounds of 66 and 72, and dropped the lead yesterday with a 75 to Guldahl's great 68.

As Guldahl finished with his 285, followed by a large gallery that seemed convinced the former automobile salesman was "in," word came to the clubhouse Nelson was "hot" and that's exactly what was happening.

On two holes—the twelfth and thirteenth—Nelson, the Metropolitan Open champion, picked up six strokes. He dumped in a long putt for a deuce on the twelfth, where Guldahl took a 5, and chipped in from 2 feet of the green on the par 5 thirteenth to get an eagle, where Guldahl had a 6.

"Just Kept Plugging."

"I never thought about my chances," said Nelson, smiling in his boyish manner. "I just kept plugging away and hoping. It seemed that everything I did was right and the ball was rolling for me."

"When I shook the lead during the third round I felt I was going to win," Nelson added. "I didn't like the idea of staying out in front. Perhaps the overnight rain helped, too."

For finishing second, Guldahl received a check for $800, and Dudley got $600 as third place. Dudley, after three successive subpar rounds, took a 74 on the last 18, going out in 39 after taking a bad 7 on the long second hole.

Lighthorse Harry Cooper, of Chicago, tied with Nelson for third place behind Dudley with 213's and four strokes back of Guldahl after 54 holes, wound up with a 74 and fourth-place money of $500.

Bobby Jones 29th.

Bobby Jones, still lacking his old-time concentration about the greens, finished twenty-ninth, four steps ahead of a year ago. He had a fourth-round 77 and a total of 303.

Nelson's 72-hole tally was just one stroke over the record made two years ago, when Sarazen knocked in his famous "double eagle" to tie Craig Wood, of New York. Sarazen, taking a 73 on the final rund, finished with a 227 and in a tie with Ray Mangrum, of Oakmont, Pa., for twenty-fourth place.

Horton Smith won in 1934 with 284, nosing out Wood by a stroke, and repeated last year at 285, tri-

Reds Score Over Bees In 11-Inning Contest

Cincinnati Runs Winning Streak to Three Straight in 2-1 Victory; Lou Gehrig Gets First Home Run of Season as Yanks Win, 14-0.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., April 4.—The Cincinnati Reds ran their winning streak to three today with a 2-to-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox in 11 innings in the final game of the Tampa training season. The Reds start North tomorrow.

Paul Derringer, hurling six frames, allowed only four hits; Jake Mooty, who finished, held the Cronin men to a lone safety and received credit for the win. Veteran Rube Walberg held the Cincinnatians to one hit in five innings.

Houston, Tex., April 4.—Lou Gehrig hit his first home run of the exhibition season today as the New York Yankees trimmed the Houston Buffs, 14 to 0, before a crowd of 10,000. Johnny Broaca and Frank Makosky limited the Texas Leaguers to three hits. Bill Dickey also hit for the circuit with Red Rolfe and Gehrig aboard in the third inning while Gehrig's boundary belt came with the bases empty in the fifth

St. Petersburg, Fla., April 4.—A home run in the fifth inning by Gene Corbett with Andrus on base started the scoring that enabled the Phillies to shut out the Boston Bees, 4 to 0, in an exhibition game today.

The Phils scored twice again in the seventh, Tauby led off with a single, went to second on Andrus' sacrifice, and home when Cuccinello let Klein's grounder roll through him. Klein scored later on a single by Arnovich.

Brawley, Calif., April 4.—Big Jim Weaver pitched shutout ball for five innings today and the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Brawley Club, 8-2.

Bill Swift finished the Pirate hurling, yielding the two Brawley runs. Lee Handley hit a home run in the sixth.

Clearwater, Fla., April 4.—Heinie Manush, castoff outfielder from the American League, paced the Brooklyn Dodgers to a 9-7 victory over the Newark Bears of the International League exhibition game today. Manush belted two home runs and a single to drive in three tallies. Johnny Hudson, rookie infielder, also hit for the circuit. Two of the homers came in the third, when Brooklyn scored six runs just after the Bears had rapped Al Butcher for four tallies.

San Antonio, Tex., April 4.—The five-hit pitching of George Caster, of the Philadelphia Athletics, was enough to defeat the St. Louis Browns in an exhibition game here today, 4 to 1. Caster went the route while his mates blasted the offerings of three Brownie pitchers.

Daytona Beach, Fla., April 4.—For the second straight day, rain prevented the St. Louis Cardinals from experimenting with a new line-up designed to bolster the Cards' power. The Red Birds were to have played Rochester, of the International League here today.

Manager Frankie Frisch indicated he will send a revised line-up against the Washington Senators at Orlando tomorrow. Durocher, Medwick and Pepper Martin have been given the day off. Jimmy Brown will play short and Frisch will be at third base with the outfield composed of Terry Moore, Stanley Bordagaray and Don Padgett.

Bryan Grant, Allison Top Houston Field

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., April 4.—Bryan Grant, of Atlanta; Wilmer Allison, of Austin, and Bobby Riggs, of California, top a strong field which will begin play tomorrow for the 1937 River Oaks tennis crown.

Atlanta's "mighty atom" will be the defending champion and Allison, former national champion and veteran Davis Cup player, will come out of retirement to fight for the crown he held in 1934.

Seeded behind them in descending order were Joe Hunt, of California; Arthur Hendricks, of Florida; Wayne Sabin, of California; Walter Senior, of California, and Hal Surface, of Kansas City.

Other competitors will include Wilbur Hess, of Houston, national intercollegiate champion two years ago; Jake Hess, his brother; Karl Kamrath, and Frank Guernsey. Eunice Dean, of San Antonio, will defend her women's singles crown.

Grant-Sabin Atlanta Match Is Postponed

Atlanta, April 4 (AP).—Rain kept Giant-Killer Bitsy Grant from testing Wayne Sabin's improved game today and the two were slated tentatively to settle the matter of the Atlanta invitation title April 18.

Both Grant, No. 3 man in American tennis, and Sabin, who ranks seventeenth, had to leave tonight for Houston to play in the River Oaks tournament and could not wait for a better day to conclude matters here. The doubles finals also were killed off by the rain.

Danish Swimmer Sets New World's Record

Copenhagen, April 4 (AP).—Ragnhild Hveger, of Denmark, who has been taking the women's swimming record books apart this season, added the world's 400-meter backstroke mark to her collection today.

She swam the distance in 4 minutes 44.5 seconds to eclipse the previous mark of 5:59.8, set by Rita Mastenbroek, of Holland, last year.

Montanez Rated 'Tops' in Non-Championship Affair Tonight.

By Jack Cuddy.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

New York, April 4.—Lightweight Champion Lou Ambers will take the "big speed test" tomorrow night when he tangles with hard-hitting Pedro Montanez in a non-title ten-rounder at Madison Square Garden.

Along punch promenade the cauliflower fanciers say that Ambers' speed is gone. If true, this would be most unfortunate for the "Herkimer Hurricane" who depends entirely upon speed. Hence the Puerto Rican body slasher has been installed the 7-5 favorite.

Montanez, fresh from 27 straight victories, would be a much heavier favorite were it not for an ankle injury suffered in training two weeks ago—and were it not for his tissue paper brow which gashes too easily.

Despite the uncertainties about the champion's speed and Pedro's ankle and brows, New York fight fans regard the bout as a "natural." And the advance ticket sale indicates a capacity crowd. The gate may exceed $45,000.

No title is at stake because Lou and Pedro will enter the ring scaling over the 135-pound limit. Each can weigh up to 140 pounds if he desires. However, the tilt will be almost as momentous in the lives of both as if the crown were on the line.

If Ambers' speed is gone, he can expect to be an ex-champion before the frost is on the pumpkin. The brown-haired, somewhat humpshouldered Italian has indicated lack of his old-time speed in some of the seven bouts since winning the title from Tony Canzoneri last September 5. He lost to Eddie Cool and Jimmy McLarnin. He was held to a draw by Enrico Venturi and barely won the decision over Davey Day. He registered a technical knockout over an unknown, Stumpy Jacobs, and won easy decisions over Al Roth and Rober Bernard. All were non-title affairs.

Norfolk, Va., April 4.—Washington bowlers finished two days of rolling in the National Duck Pin Bowling Congress Tournament here tonight holding three first places. The Northeast Temple team took the men's team leadership with a count of 1,844, and Mr. and Mrs. Ruth Rothgeb shot a combined score of 772 to place in front of the mixed doubles.

Yesterday Astor Clarke and Bill Krauss, the super Occidental Restaurant team rollers, forged to the front in the doubles with a possible winning score of 809.

It was the bang-up rolling of Joe Harrison with 436, and Howard Parsons with 401, that carried Temple to the top. Parsons is also the all-events runner-up with 1,170. Harrison is third with 1,163. W. E. Powell, the singles leader with 439, also gained the all-events first place with 1,179.

Paul Hershey, Hyattsville, Md., is the United States junior champion as a result of his 342 set here today. Jack Laws, of Charlotte, N. C., won the United States boys title with 338.

Agee Wins Marathon.

Baltimore, April 4 (AP).—Bill Agee, of the Stonewall Democratic Club, won the 15-mile street run of the Easterwood Democratic Club today for the second consecutive year. B. S. Chitwood, unattached, Washington, was second.

Nats Bow for Fourth Straight Time, 10 to 2

By a Staff Correspondent.

Lakeland, Fla., April 4.—Washington's defeat-groggy Nats continued the evil tenor of their way this afternoon and took a licking from the Tigers, their fourth straight in as many hapless afternoons.

The score was 10 to 2, which represents very accurately the decisiveness of the Tigers' triumph.

There was a little matter of seven runs in the fourth inning, which won the ball game for the Tigers. Out there supposedly pitching for the Nats at the time was Signor Joe Cascarella. Croonin' Joe and the Tigers were providing a whistling accompaniment of base hits that whistled to all sectors of the premises.

For six innings the Nats were only stooges for the Tigers, who were piling up an 8-to-0 lead to the great glee of an overflow crowd of 2,000 natives come to see the great Schoolboy Rowe unfurl his fast ball.

Scoreless Until Seventh.

The Nats didn't get a run until the seventh, and when Rowe finished his seven-inning turn, the Nats had only two runs and five hits to show for their efforts. They got another hit off young Bob Logan in the eighth, but no more runs.

Signor Joe had been doing very well for himself and the Nats—until the fourth. For three innings he had found himself locked in a scoreless duel with Rowe. But then came the fourth, as fourth innings will, and things began to happen.

The first thing that happened was a home run off Hank Greenberg's bat. It was a prodigious blow over the left-field wall by the big first baseman.

Cascarella Wild.

The next thing that happened was a muff by Cecil Travis of Goslin's grounder and the next happening was Rudy York's single to left. Cascarella, now indignant, was also wild and he passed Rogell to fill the bases. The Tigers scored their second run on Cochrane's grounder to Myer.

Signor Joe promptly filled the bases again by walking Jo-Jo White and Gerald Walker promptly emptied 'em. Walker's contribution took the form of a stinging double to right on which York, Rogell and White clattered across the plate.

But Walker had set the style for Gehringer who also doubled to left. Things moderated a bit when Goose Goslin could only connect for a single, but the Tigers had their seven runs for the inning.

Cohen Replaces Joe.

Somehow, Cascarella finally negotiated the third out and Manager Bucky Harris turned over the pitching duties to Syd Cohen, who was a big success compared to Signor Joe, but no great shucks otherwise. The left-handed Cohen yielded up six hits and three runs in his four-inning turn.

The Nats avoided the ignominy of a shutout when they wrung a pair of runs out of Rowe in the seventh after he had been pitching two-hit ball. At that they were tainted tallies.

Cecil Travis, who was to collect half of the Nats' six hits, started the trouble for Rowe in the seventh with a single to center, and Myer prodded him to third with a single to right. The Nats would have been turned back scoreless had Third Baseman Rudy York not suffered a double play chance on Wright's ground ball. But York threw wildly over Gehringer's head. Travis scored and Myer came trotting home later on Millies' long fly.

The rest was all very depressing.

$16,000 Salary Makes Him Highest Paid on Club.

Need of Right-Handed, Slugging Outfielder Is Cause.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Lakeland, Fla., April 4.—Outfielder Al Simmons, black-browed Pole, who has been wielding a potent bat in the American League for 13 years, today became the property of the Washington ball club.

Manager Bucky Harris announced this afternoon as the Nats met the Tigers in an exhibition game here that Washington had completed the deal for the purchase of Simmons, who will join the Nats tomorrow.

Following custom, neither Detroit nor Washington club officials would divulge the amount of money which passed in the deal, but reports here placed the figure at $15,000.

The transaction was the outgrowth of Washington's frantic search for an additional right-handed hitting outfielder following the disappointing training-camp showing of Fred Sington.

Simmons, always among the top-salaried performers in major-league baseball, thus becomes the highest-paid member of the Washington club. His salary last year with the Tigers was $16,000. He was hired at that figure this season and the Washington club is obliged to pay him the same salary.

Negotiations for the purchase of the big outfielder, who batted .327 for the Tigers last season, had been carried on over the week-end by Owner Clark Griffith, of the Nats, who forewent his team's three-day barnstorming trip to the Florida West Coast and communicated with Mickey Cochrane, Detroit manager from Orlando.

Bought from Chicago.

Simmons, who was traded to the White Sox by Connie Mack four years ago when the venerable manager of the Athletics began to dismantle his pennant-winning teams, was sold to Detroit by the Chicago club during the winter of 1934-35.

At that time, the Tigers paid $75,000 for Simmons' contract, a price which he never justified with the Detroit club. His first season with the Tigers was only mediocre, but last year he staged a notable comeback with the bat.

Harris was jubilant after the trade was completed. "This ought to settle our outfield troubles," the Nats' manager said. "We won't have to experiment any more. Simmons ought to round out an outfield that shapes up as just about the best in the league.

"I'm going to play him in left-field and bat him in the cleanup position; Johnny Stone will be shifted to rightfield, where he played most of his career, and Ben Chapman will be in center, of course.

"It will be a relief to have that Simmons on our side. Ever since I remember, that big Pole has been a thorn to Washington teams. With men on bases, he's tough—awful tough—and he gives us a home run hitter. Our line-up will look good to me with him in there."

Simmons Is Pleased.

Simmons apparently was no less pleased at the deal than Harris, it was evident when he departed early today for nearby Winter Haven to join his mother before proceeding to the Nats' camp at Orlando.

"It certainly suits me," said the big outfielder as he turned in his Tiger uniform. "And it looks like a great break, too. This Washington club looks to me as if it can go places this season and I'll be in there helping"

"The fact is, I was never very happy with the Tigers. Detroit fans and a lot of players on the team rather resented the high price Mickey Cochrane paid for me and the big salary I was getting. That didn't make it much fun, even though Mickey Cochrane himself was one of my best friends."

Simmons brings to the Washington club one of the most magnificent individual batting records of all time. In only one of his 13 seasons in the league did he fail to hit above the .300 figure, in 1935, when his .267 average with the White Sox presaged his trade to the Tigers.

It was in 1927 when Simmons reached his peak as an American League batsman, compiling an average of .393 and losing the league batting crown to Harry Heilmann by the margin of a single point.

That was the season when Simmons, taking the advice of his teammates in an attempt to beat out

Both Boxers Set to Offer Real Battle

New Orleans Fighter Has Had Meteoric Rise From Ranks.

Police Show Bout Is Lure to Contestants; Nick Defeated Swetnam.

By Bill McCormick.

Two aspiring young featherweights with remarkable records will risk their all at Turner's Arena tonight when Nick Camarata and Ray Ingram get together for eight scheduled rounds of fisticuffing.

Ingram, who was transplanted from Florida several years ago, is just 21, and already has achieved a national rating only eight slots below that given to Champion Pete Sarron.

Camarata, a New Orleans lad of 22, who recently settled here, is rated No. 10 among the featherweights.

Camarata's rise has been rather meteoric. The last time he showed here, he was nothing but a good preliminary boy. At that time he was held to a draw by Ray Borree.

From here, Nicky transferred his activities to Richmond, where national fame awaited him. That fame came after a non-title bout with Sarron in which he held the ruler of the 126-pound division to a stalemate.

Brought here with the rest of Chris Dundee's stable when the manager of Ken Overlin decided to make the Capital his home, Camarata was given his first fight against Doug Swetnam, a local lad of great promise. Camarata flattened Swetnam in sensational fashion.

Ingram was so good as a featherweight that he was forced to fight lightweights for many months. Despite his youth, he has had almost 150 bouts, and lost only one to a featherweight. That loss was to Joe Temes on a night when Ray was so ill he wished to pull out, but did not because he decided it might hurt the show.

Bucky Taylor, Billy Bullock, Stumpy Jacobs, Bobby Dechter and Patsy LaRocco are only a few of the lightweights who were downed by Raymond. Joe Chernoff, a legitimate welterweight, was whipped by Ingram with comparative ease. Joey Straiges, considered by many an outstanding lightweight prospect, was held to draws twice by Ingram.

In his recent winning streak, Ingram has scored five victories. He started with Bullock, a lightweight, then came Swetnam, the first featherweight he had in many months.

An imposing obstacle was placed in the path of Ingram in the form of Joey Wach, one of the better featherweight prospects out of New York. Ingram downed him handily, then thumped Cristobal Jaramello, featherweight champion of Puerto Rico, with equal ease.

In his last bout here Ingram was stacked up against Johnny DeFoe, who holds a knockout over District Lightweight Champion Johnny DeFoe. Ingram won, as has become his habit.

Post Predictions.

Bouts are rated from A (Hurry!) to G (Ho hum).

MAIN EVENT—Ray Ingram, Washington, vs. Nick Camarata, Washington, featherweights: 8 rounds. Rated B. Probably the toughest of the year to pick. The wagering gentry is laying 7 to 5 on Ingram, but the eight-round distance is all in Camarata's favor. However, Ingram is in a winning streak, he has determination, and making that weight limit will do Nicky no good. So-o-o, one vote for Ingram.

SEMIFINAL—Ossie Stewart, Pittsburgh, vs. Rudie Marshall, New York, colored middleweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Stewart looked very good in knocking out Southpaw Sammy Williams twice, but Williams is only a welterweight. Marshall is the goods and should win.

PRELIMINARIES — Clarence (Kayo) Sloat, Baltimore, vs. Paul Scoffaro, New York, lightweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Clarence should win. Sloat, Baltimore, vs. Pin Boy Salvino, Brooklyn, lightweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Clarence should knock down the pin boy.

Hunter Crostic, Richmond, vs. Sam Bracala, Baltimore, welterweights; 4 rounds. Rated D. Bracala seems to have found himself again and should score here.

Betting in Day Totals $435,000

Md. Handicap Lures Best Horses; Offers $5,000 Purse.

By Walter Haight.

With three days of Bowie's short meeting history, the Maryland spring racing season came in like a lion and there is no indication that it will go out like a lamb. Upward of 40,000 customers have visited the Prince Georges County track and what's more they came with bulging wallets, for the betting is far in advance of 1936.

Saturday's wagering topped the $435,000 mark, dwarfing the "play" on the first week-end of last year. The program was one of the most profitable in the history of the track. The feature race was only a $1,500 added affair. The other events were of the usual $1,000 variety. Despite the cheapness of the program and the absence of horses of class, Bowie topped many of its big stake days of the past few years.

The coming week, which will mark the completion of the meeting, will see two stakes of importance decided. Wednesday the 2-year-olds will get their first real test of the year hereabouts in the Bowie Kindergarten Stakes. This is only a $1,500 added sprint of 4 furlongs, but it holds a spot of importance on the juvenile calendar.

The only heavy-money scramble day. It is the $5,000 added Southern of the meeting is due next Saturday Maryland Handicap for 3-year-olds and upward over the mile and a sixteenth route. Lured by the sizable purse, several of the stars now at Pimlico and Havre de Grace probably will be vanned over for the race.

Turf notes—Apprentice Jockey Hubert LeBlanc, who had a most successful winter, is making a flying trip from Florida and his agent has lined him up a busy program for today . . . Marlboro is going to have ten racing days this year instead of the usual five . . . at a meeting of the smaller track representatives the following dates were decided upon, subject to the approval of the State racing commission: Belair, July 27 to July 31 and August 3 to 7 . . . Cumberland, August 10 to 14 and August 17 to 21 . . . Marlboro, August 24 to August 28 and August 31 to September 4 . . . Timonium, September 6 to 16 . . . after the boys worked two days at their three-card Monte games outside the clubhouse gate, the track detectives cleared them out Saturday . . . from the pressbox, there appeared to be a good 500 persons watching the races from behind the barb-wire fence on the backstretch . . . one stableboy sized up the Bowie dust by saying, "So dusty 'round here that there ain't no use takin' a bath until the meetin's over."

Selections at Bowie.

Dear Al: Something should be done about the slow condition of this race track. I'll admit that the horses that are running over this oval are no great shakes, but it is evident that the course has not been as dull since the days when races were run over the native sand. Glance at those times for 6 furlongs—those 1:14 2-5 and even a 1:16—and compare them with some of the other tracks. Some of the races are so slow that one could time them with the Postoffice clock. A few years back, Bowie imported some dirt and rebuilt the running surface. The result was that the track records were slaughtered. However, the top dressing has worn off now and the track is going back to sand. For the most part, those attempting to select horses for Bowie races have to toss out past performances on most of the winter tracks. Santa Anita, Hialeah and Tropical were of the concrete type, just the other extreme of Bowie. Horses that ran well over the three major winter courses, unless they are mudders, have not been doing well here. The Fair Grounds (New Orleans) and Oaklawn Park are softer tracks and horses that were successful there step up a bit here. Horses that won at Bowie last year must be respected, regardless of winter form or the fact that they have not been racing. Clocker Mike wired that he will join me early in the week—if his thumb holds out. BILL.

Gordon G. Sikes, Tiger Rowing Coach, Retires

Princeton, N. J., April 4 (AP).—Gordon G. Sikes, head coach of Princeton rowing since 1931, will retire at the conclusion of the 1937 season, Burnham N. Dell, chairman of the council on athletics, announced today.

Sikes' varsity crews won 10 and placed in 7 of the 19 races rowed during his five years as coach. His 1934 eight competed in the Royal Henley Regatta in England and lost to the record-breaking Leander Rowing Club in the final. A 1916 graduate, Sikes coached the 150-pound crews for 12 years before taking over the varsity.

Al Simmons Bought By Nats of Detroit

Heilmann for the batting title, laid off the last three weeks of the season. He was leading Heilmann by five points at the time.

Heilmann won the championship on the final day of the season when he made five hits in five times at bat against the pitching of Garland Buckeye, of Cleveland and Simmons' friends were always suspicious of that performance by Heilmann.

"Heilmann and Buckeye were the best friends in baseball," they said. "And Buckeye might have been laying these pitches in there for Heilmann. Cleveland was out of the pennant race with nothing to lose."

Simmons declared today that he believed his best season in the majors was 1925, when he made 250 hits and compiled a .386 average. That was his second season with the Athletics who bought him from his native town of Milwaukee the same year that Connie Mack paid a fabulous price for Paul Strand, Coast League sensation.

Strand was a tremendous flop with the A's, but Simmons remained to become one of the league's outstanding stars. He was a powerful factor in the A's pennant triumphs of 1929-30-31 when he teamed with Jimmy Foxx to slug the A's into the championship.

Van Sweringen Estate May Try To Regain Line

Receiver Says He Will Exercise Option to Repurchase Midamerica.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 4.—A court battle as ponderous and intricate as the $5,000,000,000 Van Sweringen pyramid itself loomed as a possibility tonight as the destiny of the far-flung railroad and real estate kingdom of the two Cleveland brothers hung in doubt.

In the middle of such a fight would be Midamerica Corporation, the exclusive and powerful holding company which in 1935 regained for the Van Sweringens, both now dead, control of their vast holdings.

George A. Ball, of Muncie, Ind., and G. A. Tomlinson, of Cleveland, owned Midamerica then, but Ball has since purchased most of Tomlinson's share.

The future of Midamerica caused speculation last week when Tomlinson said "propositions" for purchase of the corporation had been made, but as far as he knew "nothing interesting" had been heard.

Notice is Served

Ball, active despite his 74 years, made no comment upon reports he planned to sell his Midamerica holdings to endow a charitable foundation.

Into the speculation concerning Midamerica, J. Paul Thompson, receiver for the partnership estate of O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, dropped the announcement that he had notified owners of Midamerica that he, as receiver, is entitled to exercise an option given the Van Sweringens in September, 1935, to buy back 55 per cent of the common shares of the corporation.

The option was given at the time Midamerica was organized to purchase controlling securities laid on the block by J. P. Morgan & Co. to satisfy defaults on the loans for which they were pledged by the Van Sweringens as colalteral.

Option Outlined.

The option, Thompson said, provided that 8,250 common shares of Midamerica should be placed in escrow to be repurchased by the Van Sweringens at the original cost of the shares plus 5 per cent interest per annum within a period of ten years, if Ball and Tomlinson were satisfied the brothers had cleared themselves of their indebtedness.

Midamerica common was priced at $1 a share and Thompson as receiver claims the right to buy the 8,250 shares at that price.

If upheld by the courts, Thompson could acquire for $8,250 stock worth millions and have voting control over 286 corporations. He would be able to realize millions for the creditors of the Van Sweringen partnership.

Lawyers differed on the chances of a law suit to exercise the option.

Interior Office Move to Affect 6 Departments

New Building to Release 475,000 Square Feet of Floor Space.

A half-dozen Government departments were aware yesterday that the Interior Department's new $13,000,000 building means something to them, as well as to the scores of dlivisions of Secretary Harold Ickes' bureau.

The move into the spacious quarters on Eighteenth street northwest is emptying suites of rooms in several other Government buildings as well as in nearly a score of private buildings leased for the Interior Department's activities.

The department pointed out yesterday that occupancy of the new building will provide the Justice, Treasury, War and Navy and the Postoffice departments with floor space in which to expand.

To Vacate 475,000 Square Feet.

Figures show that 300,000 square feet in Government-owned buildings, and 175,000 more in leased buildings are being vacated as the Interior's space control division begins its complicated job of uniting widely scattered units

Space is being released in the North Interior Building, it was pointed out, for expansion of activities of the Geological Survey, for the PWA, the PWA housing division, now in the Potomac Park Apartments, and other smaller activities of the department for which space will not be available in the new building.

The Winder Building, at Seventeenth and F streets northwest, will have more room as the result of the removal of "certain small laboratory activities of the National Park Service."

Other Units to Move In.

The Potomac Park Apartments at Twenty-first and C streets northwest, from which the housing division is moving, will be given to the Social Security Board for expansion of its administrative offices.

Leased space with an annual rental of $180,000 will be vacated in the following buildings: Hurley Wright Building; the building at 1778 Pennsylvania avenue northwest; the Metropolitan Club Annex, 1712 H street northwest; the Bond Building, Fourteenth street and New York avenue northwest; the Washington Loan & Trust Co., Ninth and F streets northwest; McGill Building, 906 G street northwest; the Lemon Building, 1729 New York avenue northwest; Munsey Building, 1320 E street northwest, and the Investment Building, Fifteenth and K streets northwest.

It was pointed out, however, that much of the space vacated in these buildings by the Interior Department will be immediately taken up by other Government divisions now cramped for space.

Demand Lifts Steel Capacity To 91 Per Cent

Deliveries Continue to Be Delayed by Backlogs.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 4.—Despite every effort steelmakers are unable to make appreciable headway against backlogs—and deliveries continue greatly deferred. Consumers are avid for position on mill books to give as good assurance as possible of obtaining steel when needed. Shotened demand for automobile steel, due to strike interruptions, is more than balanced by heavy requirements of users in other lines, says Steel.

In general, mills have sold practically all their production for second quarter and third quarter business is being taken only at prices prevailing at time of delivery. March steel shipments by some mills have been the heaviest in their experience.

Pig iron production in March was at the rate of 111,233 tons daily, compared with 107,857 tons daily during February, a gain of 3.1 per cent. This is the highest daily rate since October, 1929, when it was 115,747 tons. For three months of 1937 total production was 9,687,975 tons, compared with 5,914,357 tons in first quarter of 1936, a gain of 65 per cent.

Edging steadily higher steelworks operations last week gained 1½ points to 91½ per cent of capacity, a rate difficult to maintain in face of possible furnace repairs incident to sustained production. Pittsburgh steelmakers managed to increase production by two points, to 95 per cent, Eastern Pennsylvania 1½ points to 59½ per cent, Chicago half a point to 84 per cent, Cincinnati 10 points to 90 per cent and Youngstown one point to 86 per cent. Wheeling at 96 per cent, Cleveland at 79½ and Buffalo at 89 were each one point below the previous week. Birmingham at 80 per cent, New England at 85, Detroit at 100 and St. Louis at 82 were unchanged.

Automobile production, still hampered by labor shutdowns, totaled 99,005 units, compared with 101,805 the preceding week. General Motors made 51,280 compared with 54,020 and Ford held steadily at 34,800. For two months of 1937 the total is 783,356 units, which is larger than two months production of 1936 or 1935.

Export figures for February reveal the interesting fact that pig iron tonnage going abroad in the first two months of this year is greater than the combined pig iron exports for six years from 1931 to 1936. Scrap exports in February rose sharply over January but for two months the total is below that of the corresponding period of 1936. Steel and iron exports for two months show an increase of 77 per cent over the first two months of 1936.

Structural bookings last week were 20,253 tons, compared with 28,151 the preceding week. Last week's lettings included 2,600 tons for a sewage disposal for a Chicago suburb, 1,600 tons for a bridge over the Potomac River and 1,525 tons for a service building for the Detroit Edison Co.

Continued advances in scrap have carried the composite for that material to $22.08, an advance of 48 cents over the preceding week. The same influence has increased the iron and steel composite 6 cents to $40.19. The finished steel composite is unchanged at $60.70.

Bank Stock Decline Continues for Week

New York, April 4.—New York City bank stocks continued to move in a downward direction during the past week, according to records compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster. The aggregate market value of 16 leading issues on April 2 amounted to $2,252,248,000, compared with $2,278,982,000 at the close of the previous week, a decrease of $26,734,000, or 1.17 per cent.

The current average yield of the 16 issues of 2.92 per cent compares with a yield of 2.89 per cent on March 25. Based upon current figures, the 16 issues are now quoted at an average of 21.3 times their known earnings, compared with 21.6 times on March 25.

Brown Bros. Assets Up to $93,665,936

New York, April 4.—The financial statement of Brown Brothers Harriman & Co., private bankers, as of March 31, 1937, shows an increase in total assets to $93,665,936, the highest figure since the firm began publishing its statements in 1934. This compares with total assets of $90,354,215 on December 31, 1936. Capital and surplus increased to $12,709,804 compared with $12,503,651 at the close of last year.

A Government survey of winter wheat planting in 16 countries showed yesterday a 5 per cent acreage increase over 1936. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics said the 16 countries had sown 145,617,000 acres for harvest this year, 139,002,000 last year and 137,843,000 two years ago.

The United States with a 15 per cent increase and Canada with a 20 per cent gain over plantings for last season had greatest expansion.

Grocery Sales Gain.

New York, April 4.—After recording an aggregate gain of more than 9½ per cent in dollar sales for 1936, grocery chains report even greater progress in the first two months of 1937, with sales more than 13½ per cent ahead of the same 1936 period, according to Poor's Industry and Investment Surveys today.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Selling of Government Issues to Lighten Holdings Features Market.

New York, April 4.—Outcropping weaknesses in securities markets, particularly in the Government bond market, were further exposed last week. Selling of Government bonds became so persistent, as the banks tried to lighten their heavy holdings, along with corporations which now are finding a use for stored-up cash, that the rather scanty bids were unable to hold prices.

Support by Government agencies continued, but it was unable—and doubtless unwilling—to peg prices. The result was that the Secretary of the Treasury felt called upon to say something reassuring, with an effect different than that anticipated.

Morgenthau's admission that not enough money existed to hold prices at any particular point and his statement that only an orderly market would be attempted forced home the realization that the bond market will follow money rates, plus the transfer of reserves from temporary investment into actual cash. Stocks revived under the idea of inflation in midweek, but fell toward the close because of the sharp drop in bonds and the references of the President to price trends. Commodities also lost ground, after an early stimulus that sent copper to 17 cents a pound. Farm products, on the other hand, were strong and reached the best prices in 10 to 12 years for grains.

Difficult to Control.

The week-end brings to light a good illustration of the power of markets, even though subjected to a good deal of management. The decline in Government bonds has now gone much beyond the point at which the matter could be lightly dismissed by Government authorities responsible for the unpleasant conditions now faced by the banks and every one who will stand to lose by the fall in bond prices.

Secretary Morgenthau and Chairman Eccles assured the country, partly through market letter writers, that they could govern the price of Government bonds and that a 2½ per cent yield would be the lower limit of the price decline. Now the Government's 2½ per cent bonds are below 97 and numerous issues are at a 3 per cent yield basis. Moreover, the Secretary of the Treasury has made an admission of that which nearly everyone else knew all along in spite of the slowness of the Government to admit it, namely, that no power existed to hold the price of nearly $40,000,000,000 (face value) of Government bonds when many sellers appeared.

No Price Pegging.

Banks have been put on notice by the Secretary that the Treasury, in spite of the implied promise in the recent public statements by officials, has no idea of pegging prices at any level. With no particular shift to a possible decline except money rates, the Administration still is not bestirring itself to do something essential.

President Roosevelt hints he will spend as much on Peter as he saves on Paul. That promise, made at a press conference Friday, was in one sense a bullish development, although its implications may be temporarily bearish

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
9212 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone Shepherd 2363

All officers of the Bethesda branch of the Red Cross were re-elected at the annual meeting of the branch held at the home of Mrs. James C. Dulin, secretary. Those re-elected were Mrs. George E. Pariseau, chairman; Mrs. John Yesair, vice chairman; Mrs. Dulin, secretary, and Mrs. William Norfleet, treasurer.

Mrs. Nina Brann, Mrs. Yesair and Mrs. Harris were elected delegates to the national Red Cross convention, May 10 to 18.

The branch voted to purchase a boat at a cost of $108 to be used by the Bethesda Volunter Fire Department in rescue and flood work on the Potomac River and to expend $75 for audiometer tests for children of the Bethesda schools.

Mrs. F. Eliot Middleton, county chairman, told the group that first aid and hygiene classes soon will be started by the county chapter and that a first-aid station is to be located at the Bethesda firehouse.

Purchase of an amplifier for the auditorium of the school will be considered at a meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of Leland Junior High School, Chevy Chase, Md., tonight at 8 o'clock in the school. A dance and card party will follow the meeting.

The desire of a family to secure a good home for their pet dog resulted in 8-year-old William Carr, of 5004 Moorland lane, Bethesda, Md., suffering severe injuries on the face when the dog bit him.

A Washington family were moving where their dog would have no place. Anxious to find a good home for him, they advertised that they would give him away to persons who could give him such a home.

After conning the answers the Schaffarts decided that the home of the Carr boy would be a good home for the dog. They took Buddy, a 3-year-old police dog, to the house yesterday.

The boy's parents were delighted with the dog and after playing with him for half an hour fed him. The boy then started to play with the dog. Suddenly the dog leaped up and bit the boy on the face.

William was treated by Dr. E. G. Bauersfeld, of Bethesda.

The board of county commissioners will hold a hearing at the county building today at 7 p. m. to consider the petition of Mary Lee Haddox for rezoning from residential to commercial of land on Georgia avenue near Fidlers lane in Silver Spring.

Robert Verkouteren, 9, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Verkouteren, of 4706 Langdrum lane, Bethesda, Md., broke his arm yesterday while playing with several other children at 4707 Hunt avenue. He was treated by Dr. John H. McCleod and sent to Garfield Hospital in the Bethesda Rescue Squad ambulance.

Playmates told county police that the boy fell from a fence.

Dr. Victor F. Cullen, superintendent of the State sanitorium at Sabillasville, will discuss the work being accomplished at that institution at the annual meeting of the Montgomery County branch of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association Wednesday at 12:30 p. m. at Hungerford Tavern, Rockville.

Discussion of the proposed schedule for the new bus system beginning May 2 in Takoma Park in place of the trolley cars, will be conducted at a meeting of the Takoma Park Community League today at 8 p. m. at the office of Judge H. C. Heffner.

Harvard Sends Famous Acting Club to Capital

'Come Across' Presented at Belasco by Hasty Pudding Club.

"COME ACROSS." The Hasty Pudding Club, of Harvard University, presents the musical comedy in 2 acts and 12 scenes, produced by Arthur Hurley, with book by Arnett McKennan, Gaspar Bacon, jr., and Benjamin Wells; music by Cammann Newberry, Benjamin Wells and Gaspar Bacon, jr., and lyrics by Arnett McKennan and Gaspar Bacon, jr. Dances directed by William Holbrook. Reviewed Sunday evening at the Belasco Theater.

THE CAST:

Larry.....Lawrence L. Davis
Toby.....Joseph W. Valentine
Lady Lavinia.....Caspar Bacon, jr.
Mae Le Verne.....John M. Graham
Llewellyn Flushingale, Benjamin F. Dillingham
Ramone Ramon.....John C. Develin
Gloria.....Arnett McKennan
Cecil Thwigmore.....Paul Killiam, jr.
Prunella.....Joseph R. Coolidge
Prurience.....William W. Myrick

The Hasty Pudding Club of Harvard University last night presented its 91st production on the stage of the Belasco Theater before a near-capacity audience of Harvard alumni and their friends.

For nearly three hours there were presented a succession of skits, musical numbers and genial satires that made little attempt to preserve the continuity of any sort of plot. The music at times, seemed to lack something of substantial merit, but again blared away with fine lilt and spirit.

One of the high lights of the evening occured when the players and orchestra interpolated the Valse Lento and Pizzicato Polka of Leo Delibes.

The skeleton plot upon which the specialties, musical numbers and dances are festooned concerns the introduction of Feelo-Technivision, and the entire fabric of "Come Across' may be judged in texture from that. Political satire is largely omitted from this Hasty Pudding potpourri of innocuous fun. Only an occasional "wise crack" obtrudes itself, possibly out of deference to the youngest son of the President, a former member of the club's acting ensemble.

Many Notable Names.

The cast, as usual, contains the names of the scions of many noted American families. There are, for example, Gaspar Bacon, Jr., Laurence L. Davis, Joseph W. Valentine, John M. Graham, Benjamin F. Dillingham, John C. Develin, Joseph R. Coolidge and William W. Myrick.

The patrons and patronesses of the enterprise also represent a distinguished roster, encompassing a large number of graduates of Harvard now resident in the National Capital, as well as many of those high in Washington's official life.

"Come Across" is presented in two acts and 12 scenes and was produced by Arthur Hurley, with book by Arnett McKenna, Gaspar Bacon, jr., and Benjamin Wells. The music is by Cammann Newberry, Benjamin Wells and Gaspar Bacon, jr., with lyrics by Arnett McKenna and Gaspar Bacon, jr. The dances were staged by William Holbrook, well known to Washington as director of the first rank. It was he who staged last year's revue by the Young Democrats of Washington at the National Theater.

Oldest of College Clubs.

The Hasty Pudding Club is one of the venerable organizations of America's institutions of higher learning and has numbered among it members and active participants many of the most notable figures in American public, literary and professional life during the past century. Its advent to the Capital Nation always is an event of the first water and last night's single performance was no exception.

Of those who participated, one might mention in addition to those already named, as the principals, Paul Killiam, jr., Benjamin Welles, Nathaniel C. Benchley, son of Robert Benchley; George H. Earle 4th, John Dwinell, Bruce Foster and F. Markoe Rivinus.

4 Schools Burned, Fifth Bombed in Doukhobor Area

Nelson, British Columbia, April 4 (Canadian Press).—Four schools and two community buildings were destroyed by fire today in settlements of this West Kootenay district. A fifth school was damaged by explosion of a crude bomb. Two other community halls were partially burned. No injuries were reported. All fires and the bombing apparently occurred simultaneously.

Today's fires in the Doukhobor country followed a period of relative quiet since the outbreak of last June 21 when three schools, a sawmill and a community hall were ravaged by bombs or fire.

The Doukhobors are a religious sect.

Portsmouth, Va., April 4 (AP).—A man believed to be William E. (Bill) Daughtrey, 28, former star athlete at Hampden Sydney College, was stabbed to death by an unidentified man on the Norfolk-Portsmouth ferry here tonight.

Daughtrey, who had been in Norfolk attending a party with his young wife, was returning to Portsmouth on the ferry across the Elizabeth River.

Attendants at the hospital said witnesses told them that the man approached Daughtrey and his wife and interfered in the conversation. Ordered by Daughtrey to "move on," he struck and then disappeared in the ensuing melee. The ferry was just pulling into the Portsmouth ferry station.

time in the history of the labor movement that a strike has been successfully consummated against the Ford Motor Co."

In line with a prediction made earlier by Hall that the Ford company would not go through immediately with the seasonal layoff in which alleged discrimination led to the sit-down, all Ford workers were told to report to the plant today.

At Lansing, Mich., John L. Lewis and Walter P. Chrysler were reported on the verge of an agreement that would settle the Chrysler strike, which has left 10,000 employes in the company's plants and 20,000 other workers idle in Detroit.

When the negotiations adjourned last night until 11 a. m. today, Gov. Frank Murphy, who brought about the peace conference, announced:

"I believe we have weathered the storm. There is little doubt that an agreement will soon be reached."

"We still think you're fair—prove it."

"She was making a fool of me. She took my presents and double-crossed me, so I shot her," the detectives quoted Grubee as saying. They said he repeated his confession today at the hospital, where his wound was described as not serious.

Michigan Voting Today to Be Light

Detroit, April 4 (AP).—Projected suddenly by some political observers into more than normal interest as a possible barometer of public reaction to certain new national issues, Michigan's biennial spring election tomorrow promises to attract only a traditional off-year number of voters.

Election officials throughout the State are preparing for a total vote of approximately 800,000, of which 300,000 are expected in Detroit. Slightly more than 1,800,000 ballots were cast in the State in last November's general election.

Two State Supreme Court justices, a State highway commissioner and several other minor States offices are to be filled.

Father Divine's Aide Expected to Surrender

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP).—Hugh MacBeth, colored attorney who said he would advise John W. Hunt, self-styled "Jesus the Christ," to surrender to Federal officials on a Mann act charge, left today on a secret mission.

Federal investigators expressed belief he either would produce Hunt or give information as to his whereabouts. The officers hinted at least two other persons may be implicated with the 280-pound former film director in his alleged promise to pretty Delight Jewett, 17, of Denver, to make her the mother of "a new savior."

Cudahy Hinted Choice As New Envoy to Cuba

By the United Press.

Private advices received last night indicated John Cudahy, United States Ambassador to Poland, may be nominated to succeed Jefferson Caffery as Ambassador to Cuba.

This could not be verified officially, and it conflicts with a current report that J. Butler Wright, Minister to Czechoslovakia, is in line for the Cuban assignment.

Caffery is now in the United States on a five-month leave of absence and is not expected to return to Cuba, where he has been criticized severely from time to time by the press.

It has been a tradition among gentlemen since George Washington's day that one serves a special guest Mount Vernon, the patrician of American ryes.

Arlington Asks Police Increase, Pay to Firemen

Playgrounds and Armory Funds Also Sought at Budget Hearing.

Appeals for additional police personnel, for funds for an armory and playgrounds and salaries for firemen were made before the Arlington County board for more than two hours at the annual public hearing on the budget in the courthouse Saturday night.

Those supporting the police plea were John Paul Jones, president of the Young Democratic Club; Percy Crittenden, representing the Arlington County Civic Federation, and R. F. D. Rollings. Those asking provision in the budget for playgrounds included Commander P. T. Wright, of Livingstone Heights, and Dr. Victor Meyers, of the Arlington County Civic Federation, who urged that the board include funds in the budget for parks and playgrounds, paid firemen, completion of Washington avenue from Wilson boulevard to the Military road, Washington boulevard from Clarendon to Hatpeld and sidewalks along all highways.

While it was freely stated by many of the speakers that they would not object to a raise in taxes, it is understood that the county board is opposed to any increase in the tax rate at this time.

William E. A. McShea, chairman of the board, announced at the close of the meeting that consideration will be given the many requests, indications are that the budget may be adopted by the board at its meeting on April 14. The law provides that it must be adopted on or before April 30.

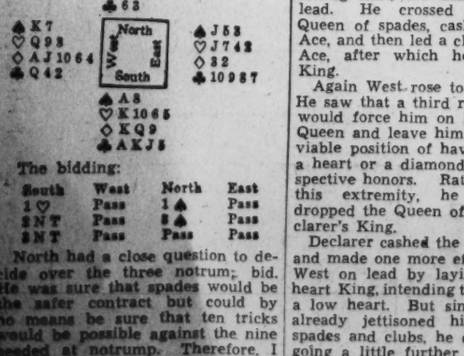
Contract Bridge

Houdini on Defense.

There are two types of plays which expert defenders fear above all others. One of them is the squeeze. In this case their fear is well founded—they realize that with conditions exactly right, the declarer has them at his mercy. The other feared play, however, often has hidden doors through which an agile defender may escape. I refer to the "throw-in play." Consider the extraordinary efforts made by West in today's hand.

South, dealer.
Moth sides vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 N T	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

North had a close question to decide over the three notrump bid. He was sure that spades would be the safer contract but could by no means be sure that ten tricks would be possible against the nine needed at notrump. Therefore, I do not feel that his pass to three notrump should be criticized.

West opened the Jack of diamonds, declarer won with the King, and laid down the Ace of spades. At this point West made the first of his remarkable series of "exits". He rapidly analyzed that the one chance of defeating the contract depended on East's gaining the lead for a diamond play through the declarer's marked honor.

West could see that if declarer had both the Ace and Jack of spades the sacrifice of the King would do no good and, indeed, would actually cost a trick, but this was unimportant compared with the possibility that East might hold the spade Jack and be able to use it for entry. Thus, West's play of the spade King on the Ace was extremely well calculated.

But declarer had a few tricks up his own sleeve. The spade King falling on the Ace, it became apparent to him that dummy's suit could not be established without letting East, the danger hand, on lead. He crossed to dummy's Queen of spades, cashed the heart Ace, and then led a club to his own Ace, after which he cashed the King.

Again West rose to the occasion. He saw that a third round of clubs would force him on lead with the Queen and leave him in the unenviable position of having to return a heart or a diamond from his respective honors. Rather than face this extremity, he deliberately dropped the Queen of clubs on declarer's King.

Declarer cashed the Jack of clubs and made one more effort to thrust West on lead by laying down the heart King, intending to follow with a low heart. But since West had already jettisoned his honors in spades and clubs, he did not mind going a little further, and got out of the way by playing the heart Queen on declarer's King.

After that declarer was through. He could not make a move without putting West on lead for his long diamonds, or East on lead to cash his side suit tricks and then to lead a diamond through to his partner's suit.
